Remember last summer?

Now is the time to Home air conditioning has "arrived!" Now you can have year-round comfort at home. For the finest in residential air conditioning, be sure to have finger-tip control of heating and cooling by Honeywell.

Always cool at night. Only in a properly air conditioned home can you be sure of a good night's rest. You don't lie awake half the night waiting for that cool breeze. And when you awaken you're rested and refreshed.

Here are the things to consider when you plan to install central air conditioning

Can I have central air conditioning installed in my home?

In homes heated by fan circulated warm air, cooling can be combined with the winter heating system. If your home has hot water or steam heat, radiation can be changed to accommodate cooling, or an air duct system can be added.

What will central air conditioning in my present home cost me?

Central air conditioning can be installed for somewhat less than $1 per square foot of floor area. For a true estimate of what summer air conditioning will cost in your home, call in an experienced heating and air conditioning contractor.

What would a central air conditioning system cost to operate?

In a moderate climate, about the same as your heating plant in the colder months. It takes electricity or gas and, in many cases, water to operate a central cooling plant. The cost of these utilities will have an important bearing on the operating cost.

Where should I go for information on air conditioning my home?

Look in the yellow pages of your telephone directory. You'll find an established heating and air conditioning contractor in your vicinity. In your discussions with him, insist on fine Honeywell controls to operate your air conditioning and heating systems at top performance and economy.

Can I buy a new house with central air conditioning?

Yes, leading home builders are installing summer cooling systems along with the central heating plant. By planning for central air conditioning from the start, important savings and design advantages are possible.

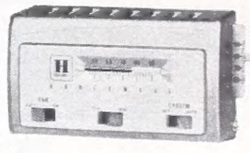
air condition your home njoy your meals. It's a pleasure to prepare food in a cool kitchen. ook and bake all you want. Appetites are much better, too, all summer ng—when you live in a centrally air conditioned house.



Entertain in comfort. Oppressive heat can take much of the fun out of summer. The pleasure and well-being of your family and guests can be increased by the installation of a central air conditioning system.

When you air condition, insist on a Honeywell year-round control system

Honeywell Electronic Moduflow — noted for its exceptional responsiveness and accuracy in operating the heating system, is now available to control central air conditioning as well.

Shown above is Honeywell's Weathercaster — the thermostat that mounts outside your house, and continuously tells the Electronic Clock Thermostat inside your house what temperature is required for perfect comfort. Only by measuring temperatures inside and outside can indoor comfort be continually balanced.

Honeywell's Summer-Winter Thermostat shown at right is the finest and most modern heating-cooling thermostat available today. It gives you year-round finger-tip control of your entire system.

Handsome, yet functional, it provides convenient switches for summer-winter change-over, constant fan operation for ventilation in mild weather and accurate automatic control in both the cooling and heating season. Thus, you can keep your home comfortable in any weather.

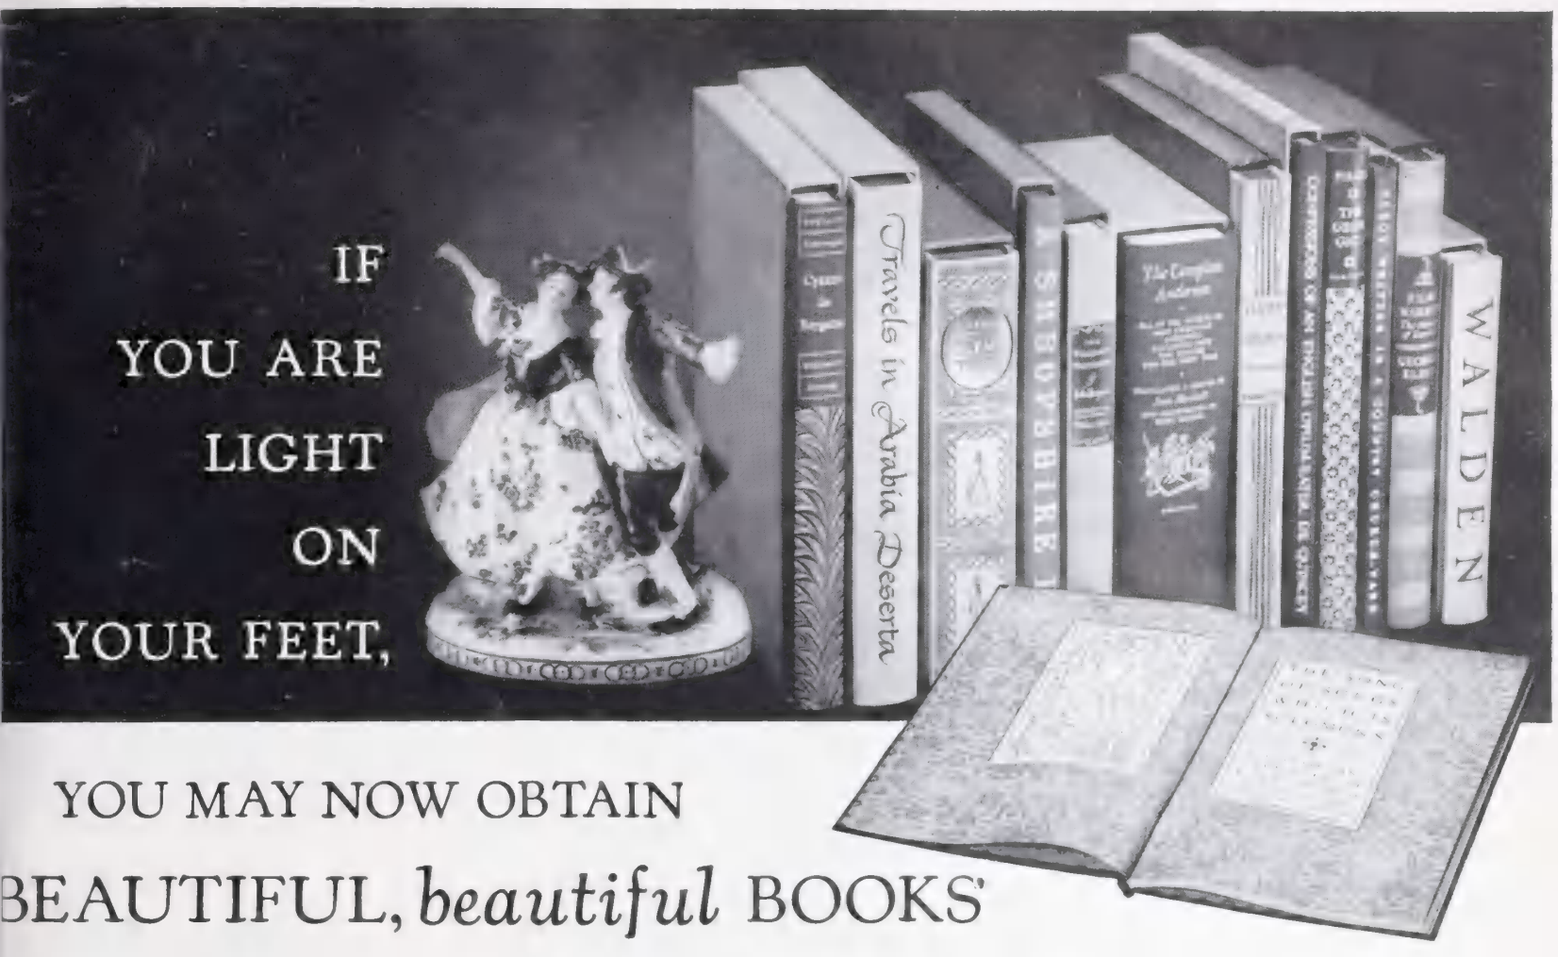
Books that help you hear music

With no illusions about the enormous difficulty of using words to describe melodies, a popular writer on music offers his list of the most useful books he knows for the music lover's library

By HENRY W. SIMON

Music is the most frustrating subject about which to write or to read. If you don't believe it, just sit down and try to write a paragraph describing a familiar tune—say Old Folks at Home. Describe it so well that someone who has never heard it would recognize it from reading your paragraph. I promise you will fail.

Yet, thousands of different books on music may be found in libraries, scores of new ones are published each year, a great many of them are sold and quite a number are even read. People read them because they want to find out the history of the subject, because they like to read about the lives of great men, because they want to prepare themselves intelligently to listen to an opera or a concert, or because they think that they will learn to "appreciate" music better by reading about it.



Let us take up this last kind of reading first—the "appreciation." School courses in "music appreciation" all too often consist of nothing more than the playing of a number of records and the telling of anecdotes from the lives of composers. The playing of records, if they are good records of good music, is fine; the anecdotage is irrelevant. It hasn't anything to do with the music of Chopin's D-flat Prelude to be told that it rains a lot in Majorca, where the Prelude was composed.

However, there are books that tell you about music, music itself. They do not attempt the impossible by trying to make words do what only notes can accomplish; nor are they filled with irrelevant anecdotes. They simply describe the nature and the techniques of music—that is, they offer a listener technical mastery of musical theory. The two best such books that I know are written by American composers. One is Douglas Moore's Listening to Music (Norton, $4); the other is Aaron Copland's What to Listen for in Music (McGraw-Hill, $3.50 and, paperbound, Mentor, 35¢).

Both of these books are written by adults and for adults. They do not make believe that learning the essential nature of harmony or the meaning of the hieroglyphics on the page of an orchestral score is something that can be done without sustained attention. Nor does either of them pretend that reading about music is a substitute for listening to it. All they pretend to do is to show you the way to let your eyes and your mind help your ears and your emotions to make music meaningful. I have seen these books do precisely that for intelligent adults.

TODAY, most musicologists realize that the history of music has no real meaning when told in a vacuum. Music is related not only to its own history, not only to the other arts, but to all of society. To note that once upon a time fourths and fifths were the only respectable intervals in church music, but later they were not, is, perhaps, interesting enough for a musician but rarely for anyone else. Nor is the bare statement very meaningful in itself even to a musician. The same is true when one reports the growth of the orchestra in the Nineteenth Century or the changes in the structure of keyboard instruments. Such phenomena become meaningful only if we get some account of and speculation on the social, po-

YOU MAY NOW OBTAIN BEAUTIFUL, beautiful BOOKS

LIKE THESE—AT THE SAME PRICE AS AN ORDINARY NOVEL!

Yes indeed, PROVIDED YOU ARE QUICK ENOUGH, you may now fill a vacancy in the membership of The Heritage Club—and thus acquire a unique collection of the world's classics, especially illustrated by the world's greatest artists and superbly printed on fine papers: for the same price as an ordinary novel!

HURRY! Hurry! HUR-R-R-RY! hat's what we mean, in the language f the sideshow barker, when we say you are light on your feet and when e say provided you are quick enough. For you may know that the mem-ership rolls of The Heritage Club e not always open for new members. When some vacancies occur, and the membership rolls are publicly opened or new members through announce-ents such as this one—why, you are ffered an unusual opportunity which ou should be quick to seize.

Shall we tell you why?

WELL, The Heritage Club distrib-tes to its members "the classics which e our heritage from the past, in edi-ons which will be the heritage of e future." These books are not lsely deluxe nor are they old edi-ons dressed up for a new market. hey are the classics of the world's teratures: especially designed by the orld's most famous typographers, il-strated by the greatest of the world's tists, carefully printed by leading inters on papers which have been emically tested to assure a life of at ast two centuries, handsomely bound d boxed.

You may find this next statement hard to believe; but nevertheless it is true, and it seems a principal reason for the continuing success of this co-operative plan: the members obtain these books for the same price that they are called upon to pay for ordinary rental library fiction! Yes, each member pays only $3.65 for each book—or, to make the bargain even more remarkable, only $3.28 in advance!

What is the natural result?

THERE ARE now thirty thousand members. And, although the Club is starting upon its Nineteenth Annual Series, of the original Charter Members more than half still remain in the membership! The "renewal rate" in The Heritage Club is much, much greater than the "renewal rate" of any of the ordinary book clubs. In short, the members are highly satisfied!

Now the Prospectus is being prepared, for the Nineteenth Series; and in it are described the books to be distributed to the members during the coming twelve months. We anticipate fewer than one thousand vacancies. If you are quick enough, and if you obtain one of these for yourself, you will obtain books like these:

An American Tragedy by Theodore Dreiser, illustrated by the great American painter Reginald Marsh; and The Lives of the Noble Romans and Noble Grecians, in a wonderful text edited from the manuscript in the Huntington Library, beautifully designed and decorated by W. A. Dwiggins; and Notre-Dame de Paris, the massive novel by Victor Hugo illustrated with paintings made in the Cathedral itself by Bernard Lamotte; and The Story of Reynard the Fox by Goethe, illustrated with wood-engravings by Fritz Eichenberg; and The Revolt of the Angels by Anatole France; and Milton's L'Allegro and Il Penseroso in an extraordinary dos-á-dos volume planned by Bruce Rogers . . .

These are only a few of the titles.

Yet you don't have to take any of the listed titles if you don't want them! You are given a list of more than four dozen Heritage books-in-print—from which you are permitted to select substitution titles. In short, you may obtain only the books you want, and yet at a bargain price.

OF COURSE, there have been book bargains before; and there will be again. But it seems safe to say that never in the history of book publishing has a greater bargain than this been offered to wise buyers of books.

You are invited to put this statement to the test! You are invited to send for this new Prospectus, which describes the cooperative membership plan in detail—and includes many expressions of opinion from the members themselves, the people who pay their good money for these books and do not have to indulge in high-flown language.

If you will fill out the coupon printed below, and mail it to The Heritage Club, you will be sent a copy of the Prospectus. Also, one of the limited number of vacancies will be reserved for you until you have had time to study the Prospectus and to make up your mind about the acquisition of these books which are treasures. You would be wise to mail the coupon now!

BOOKS THAT HELP YOU HEAR MUSIC

litical and psychological reasons that brought about such changes.

Two books that are written from this comparatively new point of view are Music in History by H. D. McKinney and W. R. Anderson (American Book Co., $5.50) and Music in Western Civilization by Paul Henry Lang (Norton, $9.50). The first is essentially a textbook, handsomely and profusely illustrated to stress the relationship between music and the visual arts. The second is the most comprehensive and enlightening exercise in the field. It is brilliantly written, vastly learned, often narrowly opinionated, but always provocative. You don't have to know very much about music to find it vastly absorbing; and you can't help knowing a great deal more about the subject after you are through with it.

OF COURSE, one can get together a pretty good history of music for oneself by reading biographies of composers. There are a number of books made up of a series of biographies under some variation of the title, Lives of the Composers. The trouble is that the authors tell you more or less about the careers of the men but have little space—and apparently little heart—for dealing adequately with the music. That's a bit like writing the lives of the saints without telling you why the subjects were canonized.

One notable exception is Men of Music by Wallace Brockway and Herbert Weinstock (Simon and Schuster, $6). It begins with a quick survey of music preceding Bach, and then presents very readable narratives of the lives of a score of composers with plenty of comment on individual works. Like Dr. Lang, the authors are often opinionated, but that adds spice to the reading.

There are, of course, literally thousands of biographies of individual musicians. Hundreds of them are "competent," which is a synonym for "dull"; and only a handful are really satisfying works of literature. Let us, therefore, take just a brief look at those biographies of the few really great musicians that I can recommend to you.

If you want a good, modern book on Bach, including the best scholarship, get Charles Sanford Terry's (Oxford, $5).

There are at least a dozen competent biographies of Beethoven, and a newly updated version of the three-volume biography by Alexander Thayer, now out of print, has been announced. Every serious music student will have to have it. But, in my opinion, the one book on Beethoven to wait for is Ernest Newman's. This extraordinary writer has been working on it for many years and it should be the crowning achievement of his life. Meantime, one of the most fascinating biographical studies (it is not really a biography) ever written about any musician is J. W. N. Sullivan's little volume entitled Beethoven: His Spiritual Development (Knopf, $4 and Mentor, 35¢). Sullivan was a physicist, but he offers more insight into some of Beethoven's music than a dozen of the professional musicologists do.

The best of the books on Mozart is by W. J. Turner (Knopf, $4; Tudor, $1.98; Anchor, 95¢).

Berlioz, a second-rater compared with the titans so far listed, has inspired better writing than his betters. The finest of the Berlioz books is his own Memoirs (Knopf, $5, Tudor, $2.98). Here one really touches the man—as composer, romantic, top-notch journalist. In addition, Berlioz has inspired a really modern biography, written from the same breadth of view as Dr. Lang's when he surveyed the whole history of western music. This is Jacques Barzun's two-volume Berlioz and the Romantic Century (Little, Brown, $12.50).

THE only book on Chopin that can be recommended unreservedly as a clear projection of a real man (not a romanticized, sweet little gentleman) was written by a compatriot of his—the poet Casimir Wierzynski (Simon and Schuster, $3.95).

The composer who has inspired the most books of all—and of all kinds—is Richard Wagner. Yet there is one work about Wagner so thorough-going, so brilliantly organized and set down that it would appear unnecessary ever to write another book on the subject. This is Ernest Newman's The Life of Richard Wagner (Knopf, four volumes, $7.50 per volume). Here is one of the great biographies of our literature.

And with that our list of really top-notch musical biographies is complete.

Let us turn to a more cheering

TAKE IT EASY, Lady!

Keep up with the newest labor-saving conveniences. They will help you streamline your housekeeping

By CHARLOTTE CONWAY

Lives there the woman who never to herself hath said, "I will not get down on hands and knees again"? She's right. She doesn't have to. Yet she can scrub, wax, polish, buff, dry clean or even sand floors without back-bending, and with just finger-tip control. The machine that makes this possible is General Floorcraft's "Floorcrafter 12." Secret of its easy operation is the scientific distribution of weight over the center line of the twin rotating brushes. Fine for the maintenance of the exposed floors in today's homes.

DRAWINGS BY KELLY OESCHLI

Sometimes when you add a dishwasher and a clothes washer to your other equipment, you find you need a larger supply of hot water than before. For such "boosting" purposes, or for a very small house, Norge has electric or gas table-top water heaters which can be installed right beside other equipment, will look handsome and will provide extra work surface. In white porcelain enamel, water heaters measure 36″ high and 23″ or 25″ wide, according to whether they have 30- or 40-gallon capacity. Installation is simple.

'S THE LUCKY ONE OUT OF FIVE—Most people don't know the luxury of urally rain-soft water in the bath or anywhere else in their home. Statistics w that about 80%—four of every five—families in the United States are plagued with hard-water problems. If you see a ring around your tub, you're one of the unfortunate majority. Have the water in your home tested by your local water-softening specialist and see if it isn't harder than you think!

DOWEX . . . in a Modern Water Softener gives you rain-soft water right out of the faucet!

ATER-SOFTENING APPLIANCE
artly styled and compact . . . the size of a modern water r. It is a work-saving, money- g luxury that will soften your household water supply.

SAVE TIME, WORK, MONEY
Soft water puts an end to gray washdays, gets clothes cleaner, faster with less soap and fewer rinsings—less scrubbing means clothes last up to 40% longer, too.

LOOK FOR THIS LABEL
Dowex is distributed to equipment manufacturers by the National Aluminate Corporation . . . foremost organization in the water-conditioning field.

What a wonderful difference—between your present tap water and water softened in a modern appliance containing DOWEX®! Mosquitoes are here again and, likewise, their yearly menace to outdoor pleasure. Dee-Dex "25" is an outdoor mosquito exterminator worth looking into. It has an impressive performance record; also is harmless to vegetation, birds, fish, bees. The DDT-free spray leaves an invisible residue effective for several weeks. You use the concentrate with water in 1-9 ratio. Quart $2.79. Thomas Co., 1646 Hennepin, Minneapolis.

Airdri's effective service electrically eliminates dampness in a closet, cabinet or locker. Simultaneously, you get relief from mildew, mold and the musty odor these conditions bring. Operation of the attention-free appliance keeps the air continuously circulating over a 75-watt element contained in the built-in housing; this effects air drying and freshening. $7.50, from Airdri Co., 1900 13th Ave., N. St. Petersburg, Fla.

An air conditioner's overhang may be a necessary evil but it needn't be visible. Fenced in with a Decor Grille, cabinet's outdoor protrusion is decoratively hidden without impairing air-conditioning efficiency. Installation is simple and easily removed when need be. New England PIE BASKET

A gentleman from Down East tells us these are old as New England itself. Our guess is that Priscilla toted her prize apple pie in one, as she returned John Alden's call. It will bear your own lemon meringue in non-squashy safety to church bazaar or picnic. Fine, too, for taking a hot dish to a Pot Luck Supper.

Holds two pies, and only $3.95 plus 25¢ postage

Chirk Castle, Wales, 650-year-old home of Lt. Col. and Lady Margaret Myddelton, is one of Britain's many "open houses."

How to leave home and like it

By LOUISA M. COMSTOCK

As every traveler knows, you hit the travel jackpot when you're invited inside a home in an unfamiliar land. For no matter how rich the museums or how gay the cafés, you can't help feeling vaguely "locked out" of a country's life until you have seen for yourself what goes on beyond the garden gates and within the walls of the houses you glimpse from the sightseeing cars.

But these days when you travel in Britain, you go with an invitation already issued to visit more than 200 of the stately homes of England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. Manor houses, country mansions, castles and gardens are open to you, most of them lived in by their owners, who may even show you around themselves and see to it that you have tea on the terrace. You can, in a sense, make yourself at home in castles that were antique when ladies wore wimples or in the great halls of Tudor manor houses or Georgian drawing rooms—as pleasant a way as we can imagine to refresh your notions of English history from Edward the Confessor to Elizabeth II. And if you're the really smart traveler, the kind who collects duty-free ideas for improving the life you lead at home, where could you possibly get a more graphic briefing in the whys and wherefores of English period furnishings and in the architecture that shaped our own? You'll see all sorts of gardens, from Elizabethan (Please turn to page 117)

THE FINEST CAR AMERICA HAS YET PRODUCED

A man with ideas about STEEL

Nothing's too good for this backyard chef—not when it comes to serving sizzling steaks to hungry friends in the casual atmosphere of his tree-shaded patio.

Like so many others, he has learned that living and entertaining outdoors is not only comfortable but, thanks to steel, smart and economical as well. For the wide variety of steel furnishings available today offers a generous choice of styles, colors and prices.

Chairs, tables, serving carts and other outdoor accessories give longer, more efficient service when they are made of durable, rot-free, warp-free steel. And here's the payoff. The initial cost of these steel assistants is reasonable, because steel is America's great bargain metal.

In the outdoor kitchen and patio, and throughout the home, let steel—the foundation of modern living—work for you.

To the week-end decorator and Saturday's carpenter

Here's your issue! It's full of projects. Some take half a day. Some take a full week end. Some take several week ends. But they all add up to a lifetime of enjoyment and meaning.

• Do you think you are all thumbs? We'll show you how to practise decorating outdoors where your mistakes won't matter so much, making mosaics with pebbles and stones, building handsome steps and fences for your garden.

• Consider yourself skilled? We'll meet your challenge with stories on how to re-cover a plaster wall with plywood, update your old kitchen and even build yourself a big, beautiful house.

• Strictly the spectator-type? We'll tell you enough so you can tell an expert what you want done. We'll teach you some professional tricks that will make you look like a born decorator and a full-time carpenter.

• And all our projects are worth your while. For we feel at House Beautiful that if it's worth doing at all, it's worth doing with style.

The Editors

You can do it yourself– and do it with style

Here are scores of projects for your week ends:
They range from the easiest scissors-and-paste jobs up through projects so elaborate you'll "farm out" some of the labor to professionals

HOME OF THE JACK GARNERS

New curtains are the time-honored way to get the biggest improvement with the least change. If one of the lovely ready-made ones can be found to fit your windows, it's only a week-end project to round up new stylish hardware and hang them. Curtains here are green antique silk gauze with full apricot borders.

PAUL GRANARD DECORATOR

THE ROGER WOLFES

Hanging shutters is not too hard for amateurs. They offer endless decorative possibilities, insuring privacy with little sacrifice of air or light. Manufacturers offer several dozen sizes in ready-made shutters, but also make custom sizes in any wood you choose, and with special decorative hardware if desired.

JOHN GARNER DECORATOR

Fabric on screens adds greatly to character and importance of this entry hall because it relates the foyer to the room beyond. Covering screens with fabric can be done with wallpaper paste mixed thin and watery. Be sure to test a corner of the fabric first with paste to see that it does not stain through.

9 PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PA

HOME OF ERNEST WATSON

Hanging pots and pans decoratively is an easy week-end project. Here movable (and removable) butcher meat-hooks hold utensils handsomely. Main job is shopping parts from an institutional supply house. Mounting is easy: put heavy screws into wall studs to hold rails for hooks. To drill holes in tile, call a professional.

GEORGE RIEDELL, DECORATOR

HOME OF THE GEORGE READE SRS.

Interesting and unstereotyped, these accessories make an ordinary piece of furniture, or corner, assume equal importance. Keep this in mind as you poke around in out-of-the-way shops on Saturdays or when you travel. Tray from India. Persian brass coffee pot, and Japanese lantern are used effectively here.

HOME OF THE LEIGHTON WILKIES

The unusual need not be expensive. This "headboard" of carved wood was found in a junk shop, cleaned up and painted a dull white. Baroque picture frames, above, were also sprayed white. Then all were mounted on a painted charcoal-colored wall. Such high style solutions require not so much skill as imagination.

LOCKWOOD DE FOREST, DESIGNER

HOME OF ERNEST WATSON

See how a few tiles enhance a kitchen fireplace. Tiling of large areas usually needs a professional, but many people could easily manage on small areas like this if they use big tiles and work with a level. Try a few behind a washbowl or a bathtub. But first do a little practicing some place where it doesn't show.

A beautiful panel of translucent plastic, custom-ordered to your measurements, may be installed by you with little difficulty, simply using quarter-round wood moldings that are stock in most lumber yards. If installed around tub, paint moldings and set in mastic to waterproof joints. Plastic by Emile Norman.

LUTAH MARIA RIGGS, ARCHITECT — HOME OF THE JAMES HOLLISTERS

Historical headboard here records the chronicle of a family. Such painting may be conceived and planned by a week-end decorator to be done by week-ender himself or for professional execution. Draw figures full size on paper until they seem right for bed and surroundings. Trace on 1″ plywood, cut out on band saw.

PHOTOGRAPH BY DALE ROOKS

Cover an unsightly, cracked wall with lauhala matting to make a lovely-textured warm wall—quite appropriate for informal rooms with rattan furnishings. Mount with a big stapling gun to a liner of low-cost plywood which you have previously nailed up with only a little care or skill. Ficks Reed table.

Here are 10 typical week-end projects. All test your skill and patience—but not too much! Just which project proves easiest or most difficult will vary from one person to another. Remember: do-it-yourself means know-yourself

PHOTOGRAPH BY EZRA

Unused wall can be put to work by covering it with Peg-board sheeting sold at local lumber yards, where you can also buy special hangers in numerous sizes. This wall is in a narrow passageway just off the kitchen. You could use the same idea for tool storage on the garage or basement wall, or use in a child's room for hanging play equipment. For greatest usefulness, mount a light, preferably a fluorescent tube, at top of wall.

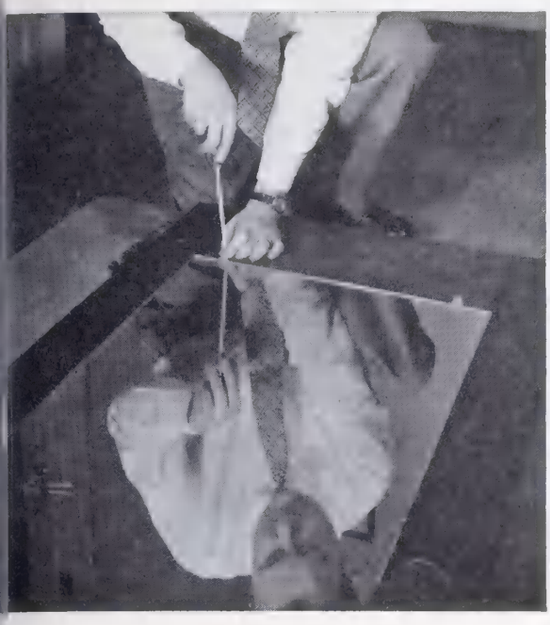
HOME OF THE BUDD GETSCHALS

MELANIE KAHANE, DECORATOR

HOME OF IRVING AXELROD

PAUL S. REAS, DESIGNER

HOME OF THE GEORGE READE SRS



PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

Covering back of piano makes it practical to use it away from the wall (now uses a mere two feet of wall space). Covering here is "Timbertone," a sturdy kraft-paper product that stretches across the openings. It could be a fabric tacked to a light wooden frame you build and screw to piano. Neither affects the tone.

Flower niche is well illuminated for a dramatic lighting effect on flower arrangements. Light here comes from a single 18" "Lumiline" fluorescent tube with a warm, inviting color. It is mounted in recess at back edge of shelf. Creating a fine wood box below shelf is practical use of such space.

Coffee-tables can be fairly simple to build. This is made from two twin-size mahogany headboards, cut, fitted and held together by dowels. Table is 15" high; legs are set back 4" from the edges. Flush doors, now available inexpensively at local lumber yards, also make good table tops. Marble or slate tops are fine for terraces.

A full-length mirror for bedroom and bathroom doors is an easy week-end job. Mirrors come in a variety of sizes, complete with fasteners to screw into door. Remove the door from its hinges, lay flat on the floor. Shift mirror around until it fits best, then mark each corner with chalk. Drill small holes to start screws.

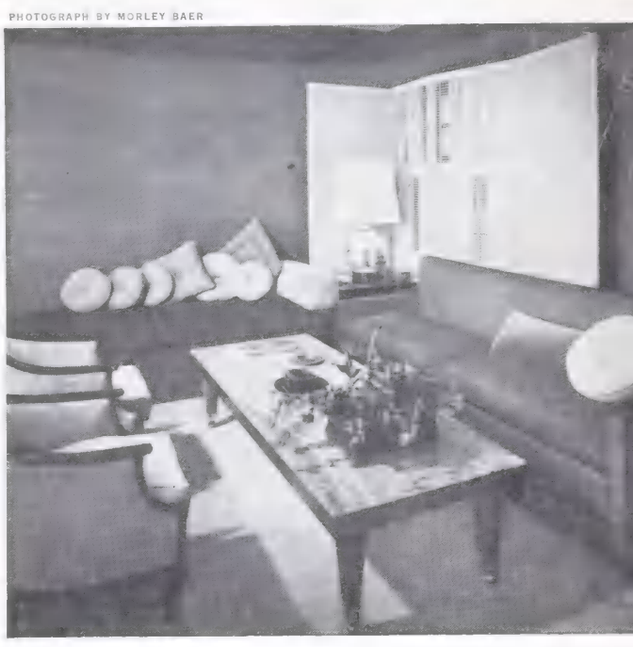
HOME OF ERNEST WATSON

Adjustable light combines an ordinary droplight reel, such as automobile mechanics use, with simple porch light. Spring reel operates on a ratchet to hold light at desired height. Shade can be purchased or made if you like metal work. Tiny holes have been punched here for the decorative sparkle of twinkling pinpoint lights.

PHOTOGRAPH BY WILLIAM HOWLAND

A transformation was easily wrought here by recovering the slip-out seat of an old bench. Upholstery material is a washable white "Vinyl Linen" plastic. Bench was then painted black with ornamental touches of gold for rich effect, and is a perfect example of how you can bring a tired old piece to new life.

HOME OF JOHN PIERCE



Lamp-making offers a fertile field for week-end projects. Lamp base here is farm drain tile 12″ long, with an outside diameter of 5″. It is mounted on a double thickness of ⅜″ board glued together and lacquered black. Shade is coarse natural linen, 3″ top, 20″ base, 8″ height. Wood disc above tile was made on lathe.

HOME OF THE ELLIOT BLANCHARDS

Bulb storage drawer is a good idea for a week-end's work. It keeps bulbs safe, handy and easy to keep track of. Use an expansion bit to cut holes of appropriate size in ¼″ plywood. Bore from top side to insure smooth, non-splinter edges. Elevate shelf 2″ from bottom of drawer by small cleats, one on each side of drawer.

PHOTOGRAPH BY MORLEY BAER

Undersize window no longer seems so here, because importantly scaled shutters extend its apparent size and make a corner window of it by turning behind table. You can buy shutters ready made, or made to your dimensions. Installing and painting is a simple home job. Walls here are wallpapered with grasscloth.

These 7 projects are designed for advanced week-end decorators.

HOME OF C. DEANE FUNK

PAUL STERLING HOAG, DESIGNER

Sliding shelves of Masonite offer ideal place for luncheon mats, pie tins and cooky sheets (opens to dining room and kitchen), allow easy adjustment to changing storage requirements with passing years.

Doors on dining side are amber birch; kitchen side, sliding enameled Masonite. Cabinets above for dishes also open both ways. Counter has sliding glass doors, makes handy buffet area and is lighted above.

HOME OF THE LEIGHTON WILKIES

[illegible] DECORATOR

Handsome pass-through, open or closed, involves considerable planning and custom ordering of parts. These doors would have to be made in a mill but could be hung by homeowners. Ivy was laminated in plastic by artist Spencer Smilie; cost is comparable to that of a painting. Making pass-through width of standard doors gives you considerable choice in stock items. Doors here are hinged right and center so they fold, leaving the kitchen door free.

HOME OF THE [illegible] WYMAN TYLERS

TED TYLER, DESIGNER

Function and beauty can be combined in the same project. Here an open-front cabinet was converted to virtually a storage wall and vastly improved in appearance at the same time. When closed, cabinet presents an unbroken area; when open, additional storage space is neatly and conveniently revealed. Hanging these standard, hollow-core doors is not beyond the abilities of a careful worker (must be level).

LOCKWOOD DE FOREST, DESIGNER

Separate oven, just where you want it and at the height most convenient for you, can result from a project like this. (Many manufacturers now offer these ovens.) Cabinet and counter are week-end projects.

Persian screens in cabinet door permit free air circulation: dish towels can thus be dried and stored in this cabinet.

HOME OF THE JAMES AGEES

ANSHEN & ALLEN, ARCHITECTS

Making your own headboard can be a project that will provide general as well as personal storage space for everything you want at your bedside. Let a professional design the headboard: you do the carpentry. If you want bed-side control switches for lights and the like, call an electrician. Wiring is professional work.

HOME OF GEORGE GOLD

PAUL STERLING HOAG, DESIGNER

An entrance screen makes a fine item for Saturday's carpenter, if his home has the problem of people entering directly into the living room from the front door.

Open screen at top and bottom and loosely woven kraft fabric allow more light to enter living room than would the usual solid wall. Note valance light at top.

6 rules for this "not-so-handy" man

By DR. JOSEPH E. HOWLAND who claims he is all thumbs

I enjoy week-end work IF it pays off in a fine professional result I'm proud to claim as my own. But I steer clear, these days, of the many, many projects that really aren't much more than boring "busy work." Here are six rules I've learned the hard way:

1. Choose jobs that professionals try to avoid or that they won't tackle except at extravagantly high prices because they are too small to bear a profit. Or make things impossible to buy ready-made. The "not-so-handy" man is ideal for outdoor construction where roughness of finish is unimporant and where refinement of details needn't be worried about.

Jobs involving boring routine can be "a lark" only if done occasionally. For me—though perhaps not for you. Painting, hanging wallpaper, laying bricks or floor tile or building a stone or concrete block wall fit this classification. Nuisance work, too small for a professional to do, except at his convenience, offers much for your efforts. For example, substitute new door and furniture hardware for out-dated pieces.

Creating original furnishings—rugs, fabrics, plastic screens or ceramics—is most rewarding. So is imaginative purchasing, in which you search the shops for distinctive items that help stamp your decorating with your personality. Working with the garden to get each plant in exactly the right spot for the best over-all effect is rewarding to me.

2. Look for products made to be applied by amateurs. Many are pre-cut, pre-finished, pre-pasted, pre-formed, etc. Others are made in new, smaller or lighter, easy-to-handle units. Often color is an integral part of the product, eliminating need for painting. And many local lumber yards now cut lumber to your measurements. All you do is sandpaper and assemble the cut pieces.

3. Choose materials in which roughness and irregularity add value to the final result—rough-sawn lumber, handmade tiles, worn or handmade bricks. Deliberately strive for a non-machine look, as by laying up concrete blocks or bricks in an informal way. And stick to patterns which require no exact matching of lines, colors, etc.

4. Look for the unusual and the unexpected in standard products. Result then bears your stamp, reducing tendency for people to compare it with anything else. Use a boldness of scale: for example the larger bricks common in the Midwest, the oversize concrete block of the West Coast or a $3/4''$ bluestone instead of the usual $3/8''$ size. Or introduce a surprise in color; as add coloring or colored gravels to the concrete mix. As for textured surprises, try water-worn stones for floors and walls, or adapt Frank Lloyd Wright's technique of artfully pouring concrete around rough field stones held up in board forms.

5. Beware of jobs that, once started, must progress on a strict time table. You can't enjoy a project whose schedule finish hangs heavy over your head.

6. Insist upon fine style. Pride of workmanship may be the spur for your project and the tonic for your setbacks. But a tasteful result counts above them all.

For what not to do turn the page

Be realistic about

What not to do yourself

For millions of homeowners, do-it-yourself has proved to be a wonderful new way of life. It results in getting done what they want when they want it—and just the way they want it done. There's nothing so beautiful as something you've made yourself.

But there are dangers in doing it yourself. You may have heard it said—or said it yourself, "Never again!"

Success depends upon avoiding four pitfalls: enthusiasm that exceeds ability, inadequate preparation, inaccurate measuring and abuse of equipment.

1. Enthusiasm exceeding ability. Don't take on more than you have time, aptitude, experience and equipment to do successfully. You must know that you can succeed. But there is no reason you must do the whole job yourself. Do only what you enjoy doing. Sub-contract tricky parts of the project to experts. Cabinetwork, for example, is no job for an amateur. To attempt it may ruin the good looks of the whole project. House-painting might be for an amateur, especially if he reads up on how to prepare the surface before he begins to paint.

Certainly the week-end decorator needs professional advice on all design problems involved in an important project. Don't jeopardize a whole operation by stubbornness or a sense of false economy. Hire the best decorator, architect or landscape architect to draw up the plan from which you can operate. Retain him, if possible, to supervise your work. He also knows the technical things (about drainage, sizing, gluing et al) that you don't.

Lean on your adviser, and on knowledgeable store people, for help in selecting the most practical products for you to use or apply. Your aptitudes are of great importance here. Materials in small units are easier for hesitant beginners. Products to be glued on may require less manual dexterity than those to be nailed on, but they aren't so successful for the "messy worker."

Also check to see if special equipment is needed for the particular project. Will this be of value to you later for other jobs? Adding multi-purpose equipment as you go along is a fine idea only if you are likely to have future need for it.

Everyone should begin with a small project. Even a professional starts at an inconspicuous place when he tries a new product, tool or method of application. Make your mistakes where they won't show! Experts always test to be sure that all parts fit before they start to glue or nail.

Experts never over-rate their physical fitness. Amateurs often do. They forget to ask themselves if they are really fit for high ladders, close eye-work, long exposure to paint odors, dust, noise, glare, heat or cold—and they attempt to lift heavy weights without a thought for the risks involved.

2. Inadequate preparation. This is the Waterloo of many week-enders. Think through the entire project before you start. Have you enough skill? Have you the necessary tools and equipment? You may discover that you can't possibly cope with one or more vital steps. Better to know this now while you can still call off the project. Makeshifts lead to makeshift results, and may lead also to accidents.

Then there is the matter of proper preparation of surfaces. Ignoring this means paint eventually blistering, glued pieces separating, moving parts binding or a finish that is disappointingly rough. Work also goes along much faster when all needed preparatory work is completed first. Don't start painting, for instance, until the item to be painted is thoroughly cleaned, sanded, scraped, etc.

3. Inaccurate measuring. Don't guess! Watch out for errors due to measuring devices too hard to read accurately. Using too short a ruler compounds the chance of error. Errors in measuring can lead to parts that (Please turn to page 108)

CAN I APPLY PLYWOOD? →

The big mistake amateurs make in applying plywood is to start fastening panels in place before they have cut and fitted every panel to be sure that everything is going to work out.

Plywood can be nailed on (old way) or glued (no nail holes to hide). New "contact" glue is easy to apply—you brush it on, wait for its liquid to evaporate, and it forms a permanent chemical bond when pieces are pressed together, so pre-fitting is imperative. Mistakes are very difficult to correct.

The change? → only the fabrics!

As every decorator knows, you can change a room more spectacularly with fabrics than with any other single ingredient. And if you observe how professionals use fabrics, you will see that they depend upon them for far more functional results than a refreshing change of color and pattern. See opposite, for instance, how decorator Helen Sells has used a one-color-and-white scheme to calm down a restless, varicolored room and give its furnishings visual unity, the look of belonging together. Pay special note to the way a dramatic sweep of ceiling-to-floor drapery can disguise such architectural ills as oddly placed windows, a triangular wall jog and a heating pipe. See how a new slipcover can endow a spindly-legged chair with solidity and importance, how a checked gingham cover can give a dull screen distinction. Mark these decorator tricks well, fabrics may save you the expense of structural remodeling.

The living end of the kitchen now serves as a gathering place for all the family, a spot to read or rest while meals are cooking, a place for snacks and a telephone center, all-important in a family of three girls. Just off the front hall, it is central and readily accessible.

What one man did to his kitchen

Before he remodeled his outdated kitchen, Mr. John H. Hotchkiss of Rochester, N. Y., called for professional bids and discovered that he and his family had Cadillac tastes and a Chevrolet income. So he did the job himself, although his previous artisanship had been limited to repairing faucets and doorknobs. Nevertheless, he dismantled the kitchen, built new cabinets and counters, sheathed walls, installed all equipment, revamped heating and ventilating, laid asphalt-plastic floor tile. The only professional help he had was for plastering and for the "graining" of the refrigerator finish to match the birch woodwork. It took six months of evenings and week ends, saved him about $1,700 in labor. Has he a natural flair for building? Probably—but, he says, "One thing I am now sure of—you learn by doing, and nothing beats the sense of accomplishment you have when the job is done."

Dummy drawer-fronts with hardware unify cart's appearance with the rest of the base cabinets.

A perforated metal strip installed above the existing radiator, between back-splash and window sill, permits all but a very small percentage of heat to flow into the room. This device not only saved the cost of moving the radiator to another location, but did not spoil plan or finished appearance. One of the three Bruton sisters, all of whom are famous for their mastery of mosaics, here describes . . .

How to make pebble MOSAICS

By HELEN BRUTON

There's a new feeling, a new excitement about mosaics, and I often wonder what brought it about. Maybe it's the rediscovery of an art form that has appealed through the centuries to primitive people as well as to the most sophisticated. Perhaps our new interest is part of today's fascination with the texture of natural materials, the smooth feeling of washed pebbles, the rough surface of stone. Everyone at some time has played with patterns of pebbles and stones, if only in mud pies, lining up those similar in color and form, contrasting them with lighter or darker, larger or smaller ones. Just to take a river stone and turn it in your hand is to get a sense of its possibilities. You can lay it flat or stick it edgewise into sand or cement like a small monolith. You can make its whiteness count against a gray background. Each stone and pebble offers a distinct character, yet each is solidly related to all the others. A group of pebbles invites you to make a design, to draw spirals or lazy curves with them, perhaps to make boldly outlined figures of animals or tightly knit abstract forms. Before long you are looking for places in your garden or your terrace where a pebble mosaic will add personal charm and delight—the edging of a path, the entrance to your house, a square or two in the paving, a bath for birds. Assuming, then, you want to go ahead on your own, here's my advice to you:

A rich welcome with pebbles and stones by sister Esther Bruton Gilman Kind and quantity of pebbles—Finding the right kind is limited only by your taste, resourcefulness and ingenuity. Remember that the word pebble can cover a multitude of things. For instance, the Chinese artists, who laid out some of the loveliest gardens known to man, used our rounded beach variety much less than a flat, angular type of shale which apparently they found close at hand and in great abundance. They were far too wise to waste effort on unnecessary hauling. In South America and Mexico, where there seem to be unlimited rounded stones, they use rounded stones—from little ones in their gardens to cobblestones in their streets. So look around you first. Examine the banks of your closest rivers, the pebbles and stones in the fields around you, as well as the offerings of your local gravel merchants.

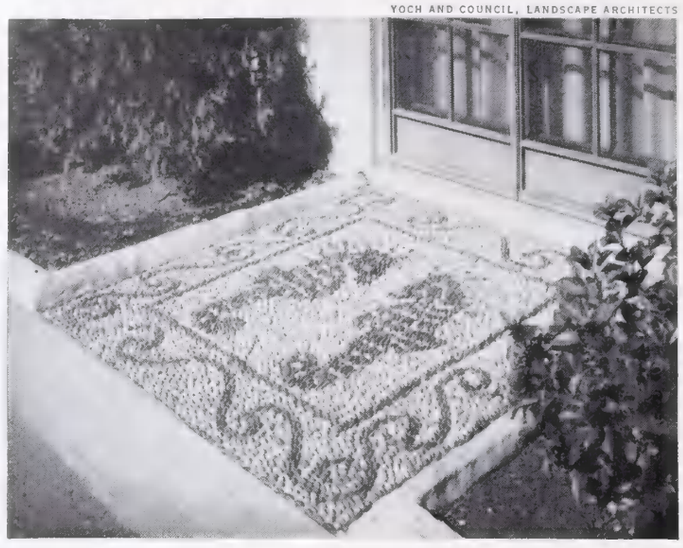
Of course you don't have to use pebbles alone or even at all. South of the border they sometimes use bones, like sheep vertebrae, in combination with pebbles. You can break up unglazed terra-cotta tile with a hammer and a chisel, and use the fragments as an interesting variation in texture from the texture of pebbles. This has been done many, many times by the greatest artists in mosaics all through the centuries.

Your quantity depends on the size of the work and the size of the stones you want to use. It might be a good idea to make a little frame a foot square and lay as many pebbles as you intend to use inside it. This will give you some idea of how many you'll need in the whole job. If you want to be very meticulous, set the pebbles into clay spread over the foot-square area. You can also get a good idea of just how they will look set close together or stuck casually apart. This brings us to the problem of design.

Simple, appropriate designs—Think first and always of your material: pebbles. Think next of the place where they will be used. The more you work with pebbles, the more you will appreciate how much and how little you can do with them. The greatest pitfall, from what I've seen, is trying to do with pebbles what could better be done with beads. Pebbles are fairly crude, so designs must be simple, strong and with color boldly massed.

If it's a small vestibule or door step you have in mind, keep the scale or size of your pebbles small enough to make the finished mosaic intelligible. Trying to get too much design should be avoided in most cases. Let the pebbles and stones and your other materials speak for themselves. Contrast is the most effective thing: simple, definite areas of dark and light. If you have very colorful materials and can be selective enough, you can get the contrast with color or by a change in the size, or direction, of the stones.



A combination of flat broken-up terra-cotta tile and pebbles makes a fine contrast. You can also make separate pebble blocks for insets in a smooth (Please turn the page) pavement of brick, tile or slate. You might even try a table top, after you've practised outdoors, where small mistakes don't count as much. The possibilities of variety are great and depend entirely on your taste and ingenuity.

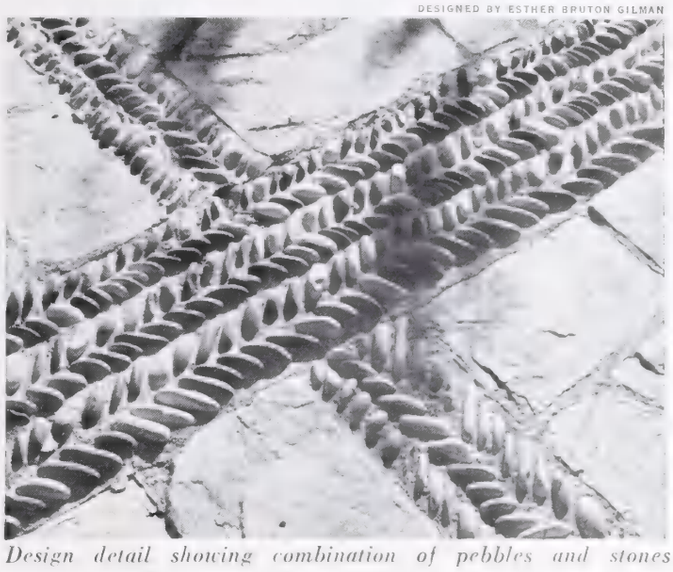
How to mix the concrete. Everyone who has anything to do with mixing concrete seems to have his own pet formula for the proportion of cement to the aggregate (sand, rock or commercial light aggregates such as "Basalite" or "Haydite") in the mix. The nature and proportion of the aggregate to the cement varies of course with the kind of concrete you want. For the base layer, if this is called for, you would use a coarser mix than for the top layer into which you would be setting your pebbles.

Nearly all building supply companies now have a dry "ready-mix" concrete which is perfectly satisfactory for the base layer, and "ready-mix" mortar (minus the coarser aggregate) that should work equally well for the upper layer. For mixing your own I would suggest: Base layer: 1 part cement, 2 parts sand, 3 parts gravel ($\frac{1}{4}$" to $\frac{1}{2}$"). Top layer: 1 part cement, 2 parts sand.

If it is a sizable job and fairly accessible, it would save you much work to get the ready-mix concrete for the base layer delivered in the wet state. But it is not always possible to get a big truck close enough to the work. A steel wheelbarrow makes a good mortar box for smaller amounts, and has the advantage of mobility.

Mix the dry cement and aggregate well with a light hoe, then have your helper add a little water at a time, while you work it up. Don't get your mixture too wet. If it's too wet the water tends to come to the surface and weaken it. Dampen the surface, particularly if it is the ground, before pouring. If the ground is dry, the moisture will go down into it. In any case try to keep the concrete from drying out too fast, even after it is set, by covering with wet sacks, boards or anything to keep the sun and air from it.

The upper layer should be made with concrete sand and no coarse aggregate. A little fire-clay or lime helps to give the mortar more workability, and also allows a little more working time. Do not overload it if you use lime or fire-clay in the mixture. About 1 measure of lime or clay to 9 measures of cement and sand. (If you are using a quart can, for instance, it would be 1 can of clay or lime, 3 cans of cement, 6 cans of sand.) Both the fire-clay and the lime putty can be had at the building supply companies.



The thickness of the base layer will vary with the nature of the ground or surface on which it is being laid. If on hard rocky ground, it might be dispensed with entirely. But if the ground is sandy, it should be 2 or 3 inches. Allow enough room for the upper layer, the thickness of which will depend on the scale of the pebbles you intend to use. If you were using stones about the size of eggs, and on a fairly good surface, one layer of mortar might be all that is necessary. In this case, have a stiffer mixture than if you were pouring a base layer, otherwise your stones may sink out of sight.

How big an area at one time. This again depends upon the scale of the work and the nature of the design. Then too the actual capacity of the individual varies. Experience is all important in this respect. Even though your project is small, if the design is intricate it will naturally be slower in the making. If you are using good-size stone freely laid, in the manner of a cobbled pavement with very little, if any, pattern, you can cover a lot more area in a given time. There are many variables, so study each project carefully.

If you are completely unfamiliar with this type of work, it's a good idea to get some practise by experimenting with small blocks, say a foot square. These can be worked within a frame of wood or sheet metal and incorporated, if successful, in a larger project. But by keeping the unit small you can avoid the frustration and discouragement of getting involved in a problem with which you are not yet able to cope.

You may find that for your particular problem you can handle four square feet without too much difficulty (principal problem is offered by cement beginning to set in one or two hours). Or you may be attempting something that will give you time to cover only half that much area. After each of the small units is well set, remember to remove the frame.

How to merge each day's work. It depends pretty much on the design. This might consist of a series of units, of geometric patterns that could be completed one or two at a time depending upon the size. And this would bring you to a clean-cut conclusion of a work session. If the scale of the design is large and the lines free, try to conclude each session of work along a line of drawing. The joining will be less obvious. (This is not always possible.) It is a good idea in the case of a fairly big project to lay out the approximate division into working sessions that would be required to finish each day's part. If you end up with a little more mortar than you can cover with pebbles in one session, cut it back cleanly to the outer- (Please turn to page 123)

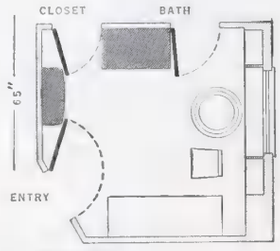
MAKE A 9'X10' ROOM BIGGER



Here was the problem: three doors (none could be removed and all had to swing inward) ate up wall and floor space in this small study-dressing room and forced furniture into awkward, crowded arrangements. (Study "before" plan, right).

Here was the solution: the old doors were replaced by shutter doors that fold away almost entirely, so freeing floor space for new, convenient furniture groupings. Shutters also permit ventilation, even when closed, and add a sense of airiness and therefore space. Similarly, new wallpaper was hung. Its open and equally airy pattern also contributes to the feeling of spaciousness, besides seeming to wipe out obtrusive ceiling beams. Wall-to-wall carpeting "extended" the floor, and painting window wall the same green gave the illusion of extra room length. The use of white, too, tends to push back walls and window. So new space was "created" here by shutters, pattern and color.

Pools of distinctive shapes are really no harder to build than the conventional circles and rectangles: often are stronger because weight of water presses against a number of "sides" instead of just down and to single adjacent side. No pool, of course, is safe without ample reinforcing in the concrete. Internal shape here was created with sheet metal: external with guideboards staked in place. Elevating pool, as here, often pays off with a handsome shadow line that adds to appearance of the pool.

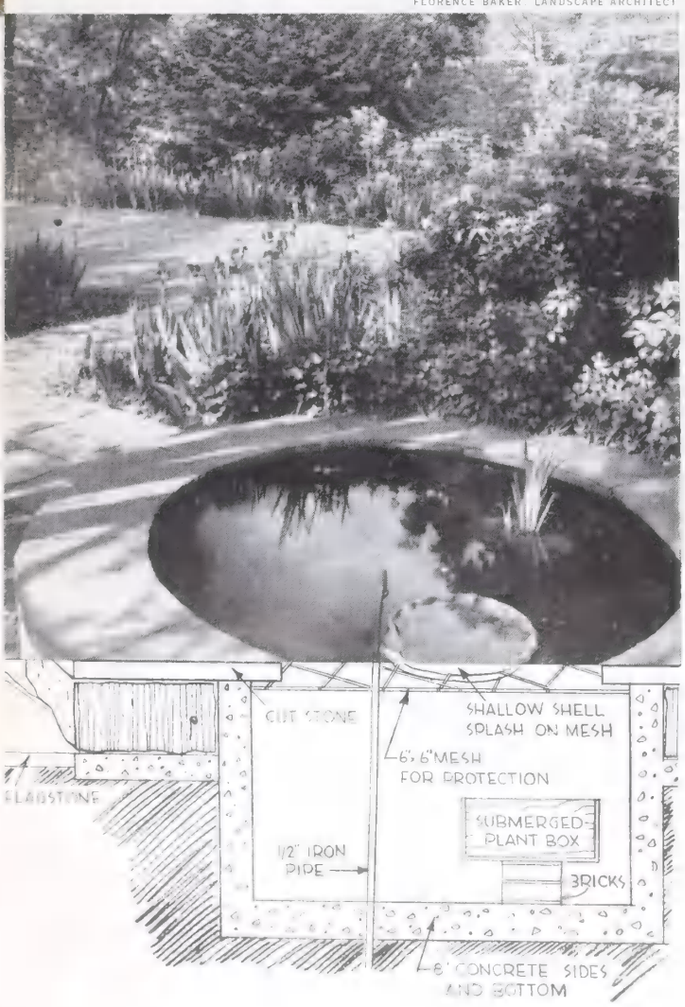
Birdbath (left) must be shallow or it won't be used by small songbirds. This one can be poured right in place. Merely scoop out appropriate hollow, pack soil firmly (dampen it slightly if dry), then pour slightly stiffish concrete and shape with a small trowel or board.



FRANK WHITE, LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT

Make a lily pool 24" deep. You need 12" of water above the 12" box of soil containing the lily roots. Bottom of pool can be flat or curved, as here. Curved bottom pool is easier to build and clean, usually is stronger. Use quality cement.

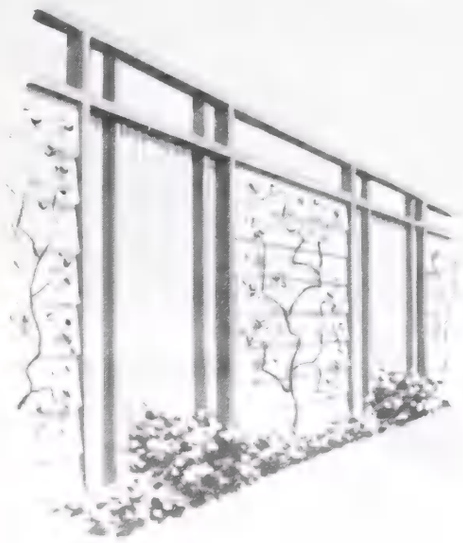
industrial and military installations, yet it weighs only about a half pound per square foot. Panels retard heat (40% less transmission than plate glass), but allow light to come through pleasantly diffused. The amount of light transmitted depends on the color. Clear tints allow as much as 90%, the darker hues, used for roof coverings, only about 45%. Integral color eliminates fading. A power saw is best for cutting the panels, but a handsaw will do.

Panels won't crack, shrink or warp. Cleaning? When they're dirty, you hose them down. You have a choice of thickness and types of surfaces (corrugated or flat) depending on the purpose for which panel is intended.



For exterior installation, the most commonly used is 2½" corrugation with a thickness of approximately 1/16". A 1¼" corrugation gives finer detail when that is desired. Retail prices, from lumberyards, glass stores or building supply houses, vary from 75c to approximately $1 per square foot. Its comparatively high initial cost is offset by its long life and virtual elimination of maintenance. Standard lengths range from four to twelve feet, widths from 26 to 42 inches. Its variety of use is enormous. What other material can serve so effectively as a shower-bath enclosure or act as a sunshade or windbreak outdoors?

WHAT TO DO ABOUT A

White roof paint, applied with brush or spray, reflects solar energy back to sky, keeps it from heating up roof and attic. Use it on porch roofs and over attics which are hard to insulate or ventilate.

Reflective insulation, stapled to underside of rafters, bounces heat back from the underside of the roof boards. It is most effective in attics with moderately good ventilation. Use double-faced metal foil, lapped joints.

HOUSE BEAUTIFUL'S CLIMATE CONTROL PROJECT

By HENRY WRIGHT

If yours is a house with a Hot Attic Problem—along with about 80 per cent of the rest of the houses in the country— this problem should be solved as the first step in any program for increasing your family's summer comfort. Regardless of whether you are planning to get a room cooler or ultimately to air condition your entire house, it is essential to stop the large quantities of heat trapped in your roof or attic from pouring down into your house all through the night. Otherwise, you will continue to have sleepless, tropical nights during heat waves.

Keeping out sun heat is amazingly simple, considering how potent the sun is as an energy source. The reason attics become oven-hot in summer is that there may be as much as a full horsepower of solar energy beating down on each square yard of roof surface in the middle of a summer day. If only a tenth of the original energy penetrates the roof, it is as though a half-dozen or more large electric heaters were operated in the attic for several hours each sunny day. So it is not surprising that unventilated attic spaces warm up to 130 degrees in summer, and that much of this heat transfers into the rooms below.

There are a number of ways you can do this. One is to improve the insulation of your roof—that is, its ability to keep heat out. Another is to improve its ventilation—its ability to get rid of the heat which gets in. Since you can do both or either in several ways, the Hot Attic Problem can almost always be solved. This article will help you select the method or methods best suited to your problem.

Insulation to keep heat out of your house in summer is different from insulation to keep heat inside in wintertime. You may have a thoroughly insulated house from the heat-conservation standpoint, but still have much less protection from summer heat than you need. Thus a coat of white paint—really white paint—on the sidewalls or roof has absolutely no insulating effect in winter, but is one of the very best ways to insulate against summer sun heat. Similarly, a layer of aluminum foil insulation tacked to the underside of the roof rafters adds only a small amount of winter insulation but will do an amazingly good job of keeping sun heat from coming down into the house. On the other hand, a good thickness of

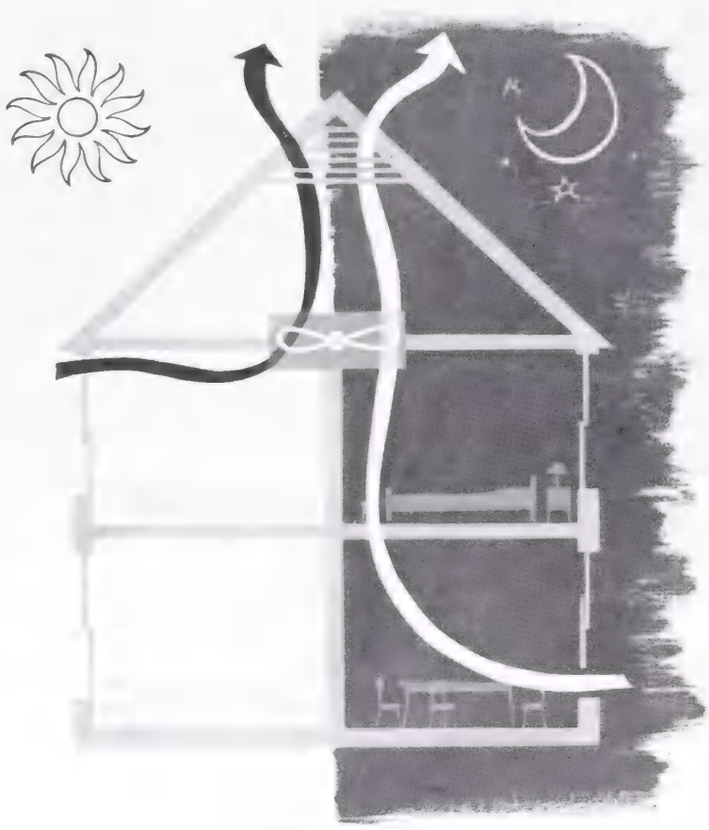
"fill" insulation between the ceiling joists may do no more, in summertime, than slow up the flow in the middle of the day and give off heat at night.

The point to remember about summer insulation is that the heat you are trying to stop originates with the sun and travels downward into the house. It can be stopped on the outside by anything capable of reflecting the sun's rays, such as white paint. It can also be stopped on the outside by the leaves of trees and vines, which absorb the heat and give it off again to the outdoor air, where it does your house no harm. And it can be stopped effectively within the structure by reflective insulation.



Ventilation to let out summer sun heat, once it's in, may depend on natural forces, such as the wind or force of gravity, or it may be induced with a fan. Natural ventilation of a roof, attic space or wall takes advantage of the buoyancy of heated air, and works to just about the extent needed, almost without your knowing it. Mechanical ventilation, on the other hand, must be switched on and off, and consumes electricity when in use. However, it is vastly more powerful than natural ventilation, and can carry off huge quantities of heat in a brief space of time. It may also be used to create cooling breezes whenever and wherever you wish by opening and closing the windows.

If you are building a new house, you will certainly want to design it to get maximum use of natural ventilation through the top of your house. (See May HOUSE BEAUTIFUL, "How to Be the Only House in Town with a Breeze.") Even so, if you do not plan air conditioning, you will probably also want to take advantage of mechanical ventilation. You may even want to use an attic fan as a positive means of taking the roof "heat load" off your refrigeration cooling, if you do air-condition.

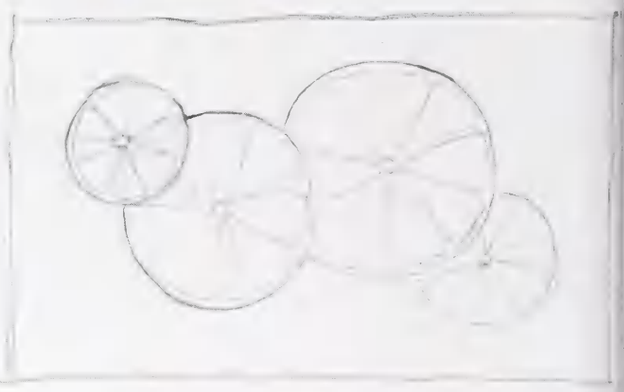
For the vast majority of us who already have our houses and want to do something about keeping out heat this summer, the choice of means is more restricted. For most of us, excluding the heat with planting or paint, and getting rid of it quickly with an attic fan, rate very high on the scale of things to be considered. (Please turn to page 128)

Ridge ventilators, located as high as possible and near the center of the attic, let out heat trapped between rafters. They double effectiveness of louvers or windows in gable ends of attic and openings in eaves.

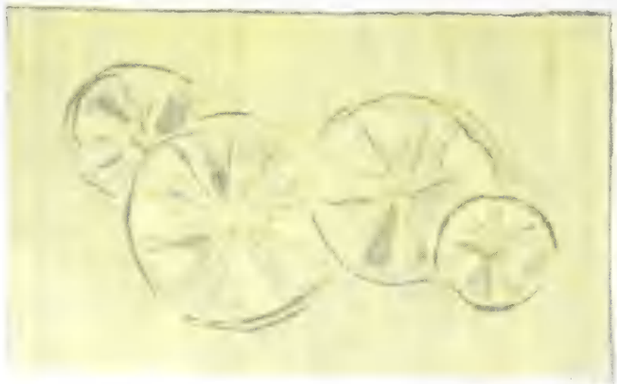
Attic fan may be used to cool the attic and ceilings in the daytime as well as to cool the entire house at night. Open windows at the top to cool the ceiling; at the bottom to cool the whole house.

FROM RAGS TO RICHES

You too can easily make a beautiful rug out of odds and ends of felts, woolens, silks and whatnot



It was only three years ago that George Wells, creator (there is no better word) of the extraordinary rug opposite, hooked his first one. It was six feet long and forty inches wide, and he made it out of old rags somebody gave him.



Since then he has been using anything that came his way: old denim pants, torn slipcovers, red felt from the wastebasket of a department store, even an unwearable Persian lamb coat. His rugs have cost him as little as a few dollars and have sometimes taken only a few days. "And it wasn't until after I had made them," he says, "that I started reading about how to make them." He went at rugs his own way, breaking all the "rules" in the process: using hooks, speed-hookers and punches, needles and cement: hooking, knotting, prodding, stitching and couching as he saw the need—often in the same rug.

If you have never tried to hook a rug, because you thought the only kind were early American whimsies with commercial patterns, Mr. Wells's latest rug should offer encouragement. He designed it himself. So can we, we have found. We've tried it and it works. On the right is an example he has drawn for us showing how you can go from simple lemon slices to a complete rug design. Design is not art, he reminds us, and to design you don't have to be an artist. Later we'll show you how you can go from doodles and common objects to advanced designs and patterns.

Don't let equipment stop you. Very (Please turn to page 106)

This evolution of a design for a rug proves that you needn't be an artist to devise an interesting pattern. It can start, as here, with the drawing of a slice of lemon, then filling a sheet of paper of the same proportions you plan for your rug, as you would arrange lemon slices on a dish. You might even use blues or greens instead of yellows.

A new freedom of expression with old materials

An amateur's enthusiastic concern for results instead of method can pave the way to a new kind of self-expression. The maker of this rug refused to be limited by traditional rules in either his materials or tools. He freely combined felt, new yarns, old rags and remnants. He used every tool and technique, established or improvised, to create variations in height of loops and width of strips. Couching, stitching, knotting and hooking were all combined with one goal in mind: a work of personal art.

This rather narrow house is beautifully widened visually by means of the continuing floor and ceiling lines, the beams projecting into the garden and the use of glass walls where they make most sense. There is openness in this house without loss of privacy or even intimacy.

Use of heavy gravel and stones seems to tie the architecture deeper into site. For dramatic night lighting, candles are floated on blocks of wood in children's wading pool (below).

The simple post-and-beam framing structure (above) was fairly easy and economical to put up, even by non-professionals, yet it resulted in a handsome, spacious and fully satisfactory house, as the living room below should testify.

The entry is impressive and warmly welcoming. It has its own "greeting patio" sheltered by a fine olive tree. Structure itself, when exposed, becomes the dominant decorative element, thus reducing final costs without reducing fine effects. This was basic in the planning.

THEY BUILT IT THEMSELVES FOR $9,000

But even more important, they built it big and beautiful. During the years ahead that will count more and more. It's small consolation to have a home without personal distinction, even though you did it cheaply and all by yourself. You'll always wish you had aimed higher.

Here considerable distinction was achieved by a design that took in these factors: fitting the house to its difficult site, settling it among fine old olive trees and making the exposed post-and-beam structure the primary source for the decorative and textural beauty.

Note the rhythmical regularity of the posts, at modular intervals of eight feet, which allow for sections of solid wall, large glass areas or sensible combinations of both. This simplicity of framing is largely to be credited for the over-all unity and inexpensive construction. The beams integrate the parts to each other by being continuous inside, as well as tying the house with the garden by being extended beyond the roof line and into the trees. The post-and-beam frame offers a visual effect of spaciousness by letting the ceiling continue without interruption through the interior out past the walls. It also permits excellent high-level ventilation at the ceiling for drawing off hot air.

That saved some money, but he advises those who have little architectural training to work with a professional architect, pay him for plans and for supervision of all work done, whether by yourself or others. The house here was built by Straub, his wife and one friend during a three-month summer vacation and three months of week-ends. It's the first they ever built. Framing, carpentry, cabinet work and painting were done by them. Mrs. Straub laid the brick floor in the living room and did most of the painting. The Sea of Music within us

By RICHARD WILLIAMS

Rachel Carson's book, The Sea Around Us, enjoyed a success nothing short of phenomenal. That is, of course, a tribute to the book. Here was a story containing none of the expected ingredients of popular reading matter, a factual story garnished neither with plumes nor daggers, nor well-developed heroines, nor country doctors. Yet The Sea Around Us was read by more people than read the usual historical novel or medical revelation. Something of its appeal is undoubtedly due to the subject.

The sea fascinates us. The sea, perhaps more than the mountains or the fields, has always captured our imagination. That imagination, made articulate, has been given shape in all forms of art, in story-telling, painting and music, ranging from Van Gogh's "Sail Boats" to Joseph Conrad's Typhoon. The sea has always held, and, in spite of our expanding physical and geographical knowledge, continues to hold a mystery. That mystery stands as a symbol, interchangeable and easily used, of man's soul, the sea within us.

How to be a Week-end

Which is to say, how to eat well all week end without work

On Monday morning, the coming week end seems far away and twice as long as it really is. We seem to think each one is a lovely island of time in which we will accomplish all those things we've been thinking about for the past few weeks. This time of year one thing leads to another even more urgently—deciding to paint the outdoor furniture may touch off the inspiration to turn the back porch into a summer dining room, and this in turn calls for a new little terrace of paving or brick just beyond for the barbecue. After all, the summer's young, so why not spend a few hard-working week ends now in order to make all the remaining ones more enjoyable? No one really minds the work: that's not the problem. But there is one real problem to solve before such a week end can be counted a real success.

The problem is how to devote all your time to a week end project and still eat as well as you ever do. Because food becomes especially important on week ends, three meals a day become Three Meals a Day. Even breakfast departs from its usual efficient work-day pattern and has a tendency to become a repast worth anticipating. In fact it's heresy if it doesn't, in spite of hammer, nails and paint brush.

For those of us responsible for the menu, Operation Week-end Decorator may have a hard time becoming reconciled with Operation Week-end Cook. I think the answer to it all is to skip cooking entirely from Saturday morning to Sunday night, except for such simple things as making coffee, putting a salad together or reheating a dish from the freezer. Let your freezer and pantry shelf take over the meals and turn out really delicious ones that effortlessly fit your non-existent timetable.

It's not as complicated as it sounds. If you have a versatile freezer stock of prepared dishes plus a selective group of frozen meats, breads, vegetables and fruit, and a shelf of convenient mixes and canned foods, all that's left to buy or think about are a few salad greens, fresh fruit and perhaps some special cheese.

For years, even before we had a freezer, I've done my weekly shopping on Friday, as I've found it gives the week end such a good head start. I've also developed the habit of putting many of the fruits and vegetables away ready to eat or to cook, and I've learned that having a bottle of pre-prepared French dressing or a few hard-cooked eggs on hand could make an unbelievable difference when it's time for a quick week-end meal. So to round out what is already stowed away on shelves and in the freezer, I make a point of having all my salad ingredients ready, all the table fruit washed and ready to eat, and I check to see that there is plenty of beer cooling in the refrigerator. I also see that there is a good supply of charcoal in the bin, since we cook most of our meat outdoors during the summer. We find it not only makes the meat taste better, but it's much easier and much more fun than using the stove.

Here's a typical week-end plan, using little besides what is already on hand and offering the cook a maximum of free time to work or relax without lowering the standard of the meals in any way. This plan makes you use your imagination. Appetizing and interesting meals are the goal.

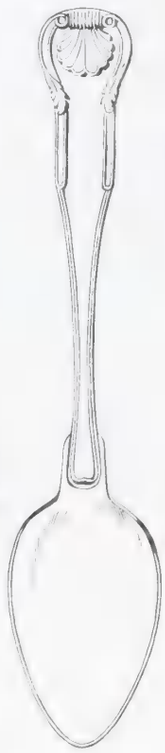
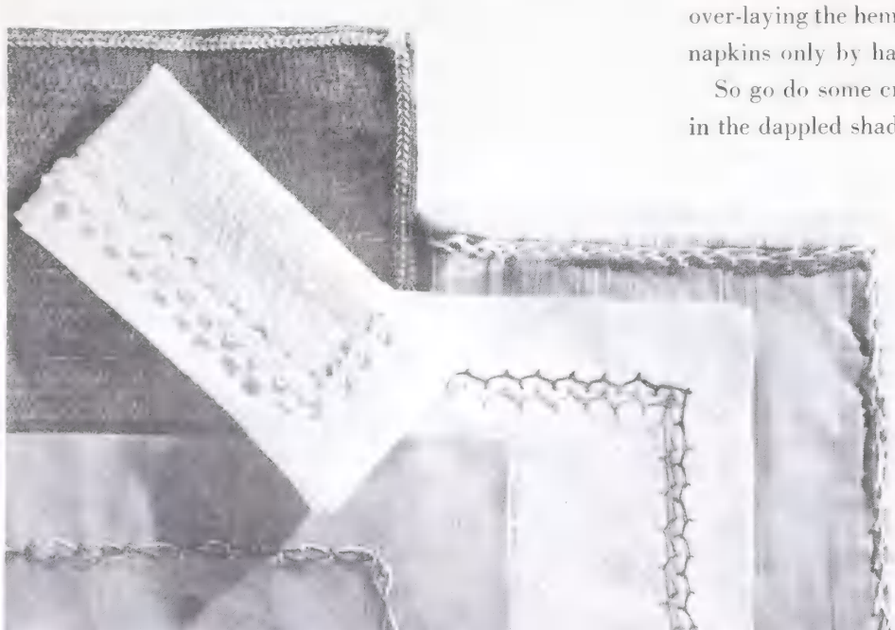
The arrival of the No-Iron Napkin

By LAURA TANNER



Napkins that you do not need to iron are here. You make them yourself out of cool plissés, or deliciously colored "Dip 'n' Dry" cotton, or chiffon-like cotton crepes that the top fashion designers are using so stylishly.

On these two pages are eight types of napkins made of eight suitable fabrics. Yard goods counters are heaped with many others. Try plissés or seersuckers, novelty piqués shot with glittering Lurex. Or use fast-drying spun nylon, fringed and embroidered. And don't forget our grandmothers' standbys—handwoven silk tweeds, Chinese raw silk, and all the crushy, heavy ratinés. They all come in heavenly colors, and mate well with today's fine plastic and straw mats.

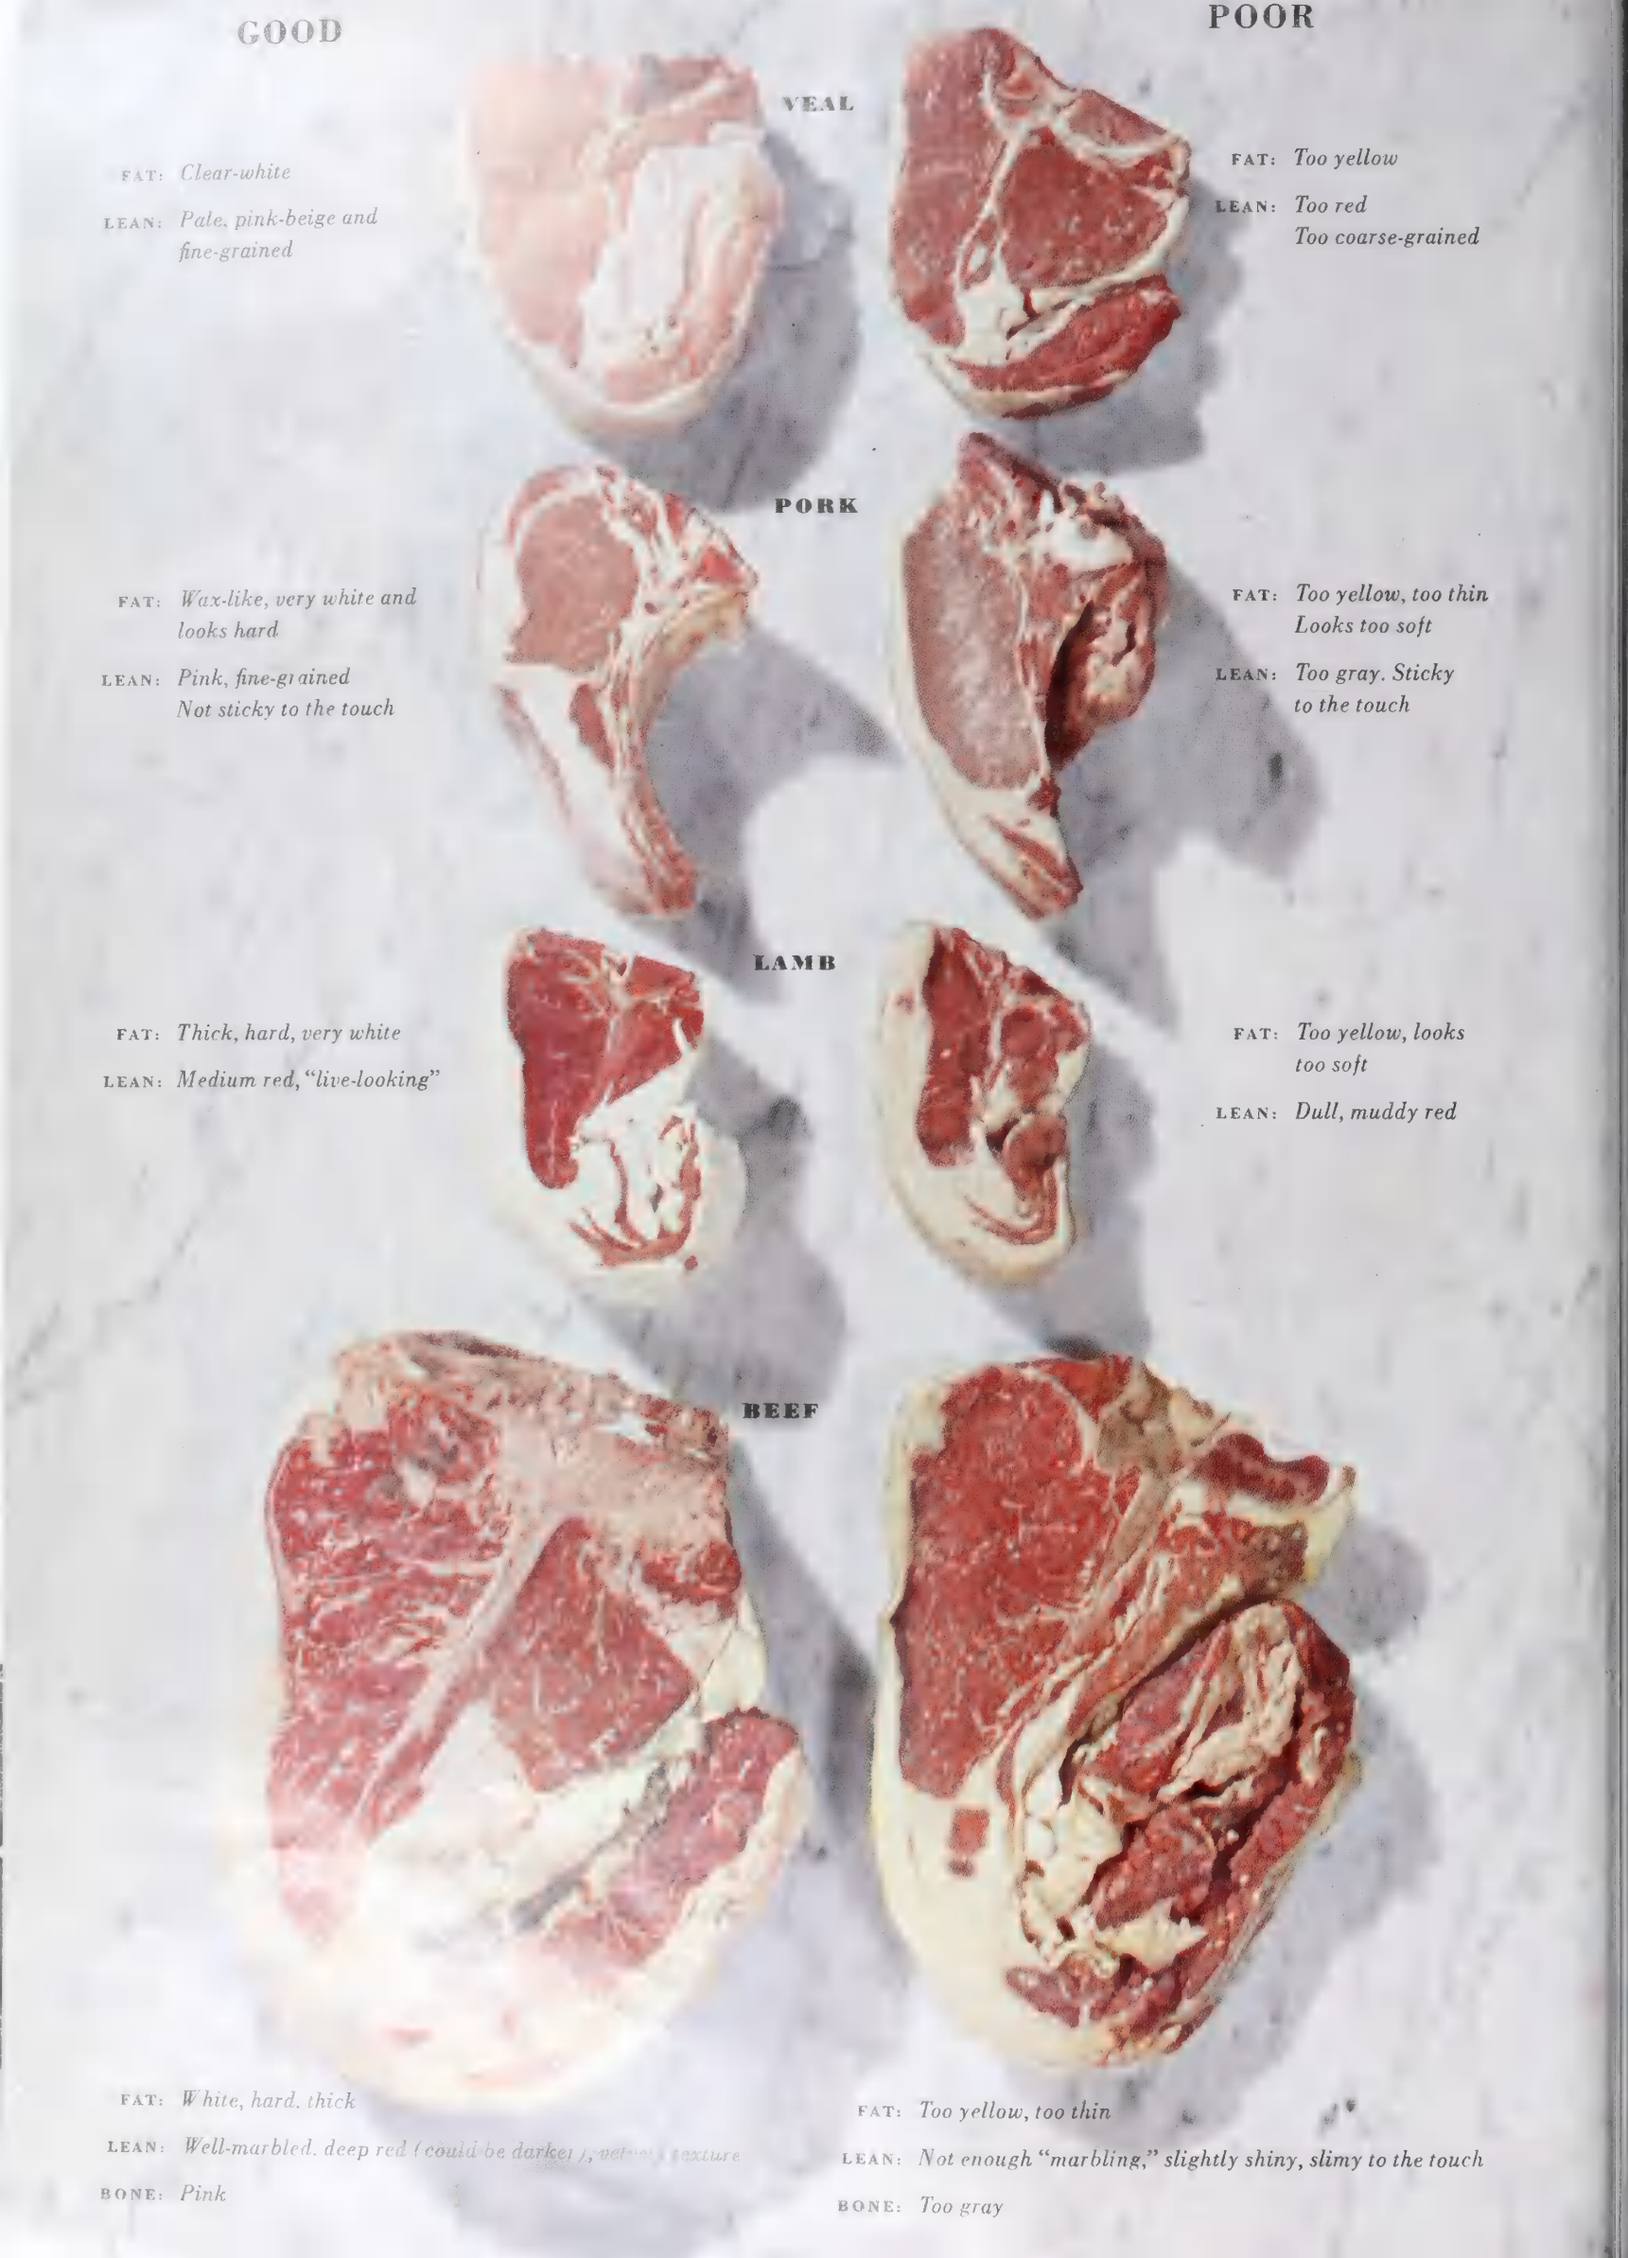


Don't waste an enormous amount of handwork on something you are being casual about, and whose main purpose is to save man hours. Those shown here whip together fast and pleasurably without any of the tedious, fine stitchery we used to associate with napkin making. The more relaxed your attitude and your hand, the more successfully you will achieve a hem that doesn't pucker and draw after washing. Abhor the tightly drawn thread and the tiny close stitches. Hem by hand with big, loose embroidery stitches which trim as they sew. Feather-stitching or buttonholing are ideal, for these have lots of "give" and anchor the hem just as well as fine stitches. Use coarse, colorful threads making sure they are washable. (See examples here.)

Another practical finish is a wide, heavy hem with mitered corners which stays trim by its own weight. But even here, cover actual sewing (even, loose hemming) with braid, fringe or couching so, if the hem puckers, it won't show. If you are good at sewing on a machine with a very loose tension, run them up that way, but we still recommend over-laying the hem with a decorative covering. If you plan to wash such napkins only by hand, fringe them, otherwise settle for real hemming.

So go do some creative purchasing of fabrics and trimmings and sit in the dappled shade in your garden and start having some fun.

Timeless, undated shell design decorates Kirk's "Kirk King" sterling on table (opposite).



Napkins that don't require ironing must be made of loosely woven, crinkly fabrics. These include Thaibok silk tweed edged in gold braid; Fuller's "Playtone" with straw fringe; Chinese raw silk, feather-stitched in nylon fishline; plissé with cotton fringe; a wide-hemmed "Quinkle" crepe from ABC Fabrics. Edgings, fringe, Joseph Franken.

HOW TO BUY THE BEST MEAT IN YOUR TOWN

You don't get it just by asking for the best and paying the price

By PRISCILLA LANGEWIESCHE

There is only one sure way to get good meat: You have to ick it out yourself. This means you have to be able to tell ood meat from not-so-good meat when you see it in the store. epeat: This is the only sure way.

our butcher is merciless

Perhaps you don't believe this. Perhaps you still think you an jolly him along, smile nicely, tell him that you have special ompany coming and want something really good—and get it. hink over your experience; you'll find it simply doesn't ork. Your butcher will not help you out. He can't.

The nature of his business won't let him. Really good meat scarce. There are more poorly raised animals than there re first-rate ones. The butcher must get rid of the less de- irable meat. This goes for any type of store, any neighbor- ood, at any price level. The dealer is bound always to have small amount of better-than-the-rest meat on hand. He hasn't nough of this to go around. He has to hold it back for the ustomer who really knows meat, and it might as well be you.

There is no Magic Word

But why can't you order meat simply by grade by saying: "I want two Porterhouse steaks, and they must be prime beef?" It certainly seems the business-like way to do it. But it doesn't work—not in the meat business. It's important for you to understand the grading systems, so you won't be fooled.

A quick look shows that there are two ways of grading meat—by U. S. government grades and by commercial grades. The U. S. government grades you see in the markets are: U. S. Prime, U. S. Choice, U. S. Good. Note that the letters "U. S." go with each grade. That gives them an exact legal meaning. The words "prime," "choice," "good" by themselves mean anything or nothing. U. S. graded meat always has the grade stamped on the fat.

What's wrong with this system? Most packers don't use it any more. During the war and under price control, all meat had to be marked with U. S. grades. But now, if you ask your butcher for U. S. Choice, he will probably tell you—and truthfully—"We don't carry government graded meat any more.

(Please turn the page)

HOW TO BUY THE BEST MEAT IN YOUR TOWN continued

Instead, we carry John Doe's 'Excellent.' " Here now you meet the commercial grading systems. Every major packer has his own system, with his own terms. There are two things wrong with commercial grading systems:

1. The names are wildly over-optimistic. You know how it is with olives, where "Super-Colossal" means large, "Jumbo" means medium, "Large" means small. John Doe's "Excellent" means probably: "all right."

2. The grades are often too broad. Your butcher tells you that John Doe's "Excellent" is "equivalent to U. S. Choice." This is true. But he neglects to tell you that "Excellent" also includes meat that is equivalent to U. S. Good. Also, for those not in the know, there is no way of comparing the grades of one packer with those of another. Only your eye can tell you which end of the scale your piece of meat fits.

In the trade itself, they use sub-grades (John Doe's #N, for instance). These do narrowly define a certain quality of meat. The meat dealer orders by these sub-grades, and he knows what he is going to get. But he won't let you in on these sub-grades. This shouldn't be so. It's time the meat trade took a new look at its relations with the public. Meanwhile, it all adds up to one thing: There is no magic word that will get you good meat; you have to buy by eye. Let's get down to cases.

BEEF

The number one clue to good beef is: many small flecks or veins of white fat running through the red of the meat. This is called "marbling." It shows the animal has been properly (and expensively) fed. "Marbling" therefore directly indicates good flavor. Indirectly, it indicates tenderness.

Beef has to be "hung" in order to be tender; that is, it has to be aged perhaps 12 to 15 days. And the point is: only well-marbled meat, with a thick "cover" of fat, can be hung without spoiling. Hence, poorly marbled meat has not been properly hung; and it will not be tender. Well-marbled meat may not have been hung enough. No use asking; you would not get a satisfactory answer. But you can check.

Poke it: if it springs back firmly where your finger made the dent, it's been well hung. If the hole just stays there, oozing back slowly, ask your butcher to show you something else. In the interest of sanitation, ask the butcher to give you a clean piece of waxed paper to use in making such tests.

Run your finger across the meat: if the fibers separate easily and definite cracks appear behind your finger as it moves, that meat has not been hung long enough. In truly well hung tender beef, the fibers cling together.

Watch out for the wet and slippery look. This is bad. means various undesirable things (which add up to improp treatment). A first-class, properly hung piece of beef "velvety"; it does not shine like theatrical satin.

Dark red is the best color for beef: not the light, brigh red that really looks much more appetizing, and is usuall shown in meat advertisements. Because the bright red me "looks better" to most of their customers, some butchers wra their beef in paper specially treated to make it bright red.

The bone should be pink and soft, with red streaks ru ning through it; not gray and brittle. It should have a so covering that you can stick your thumb nail into.

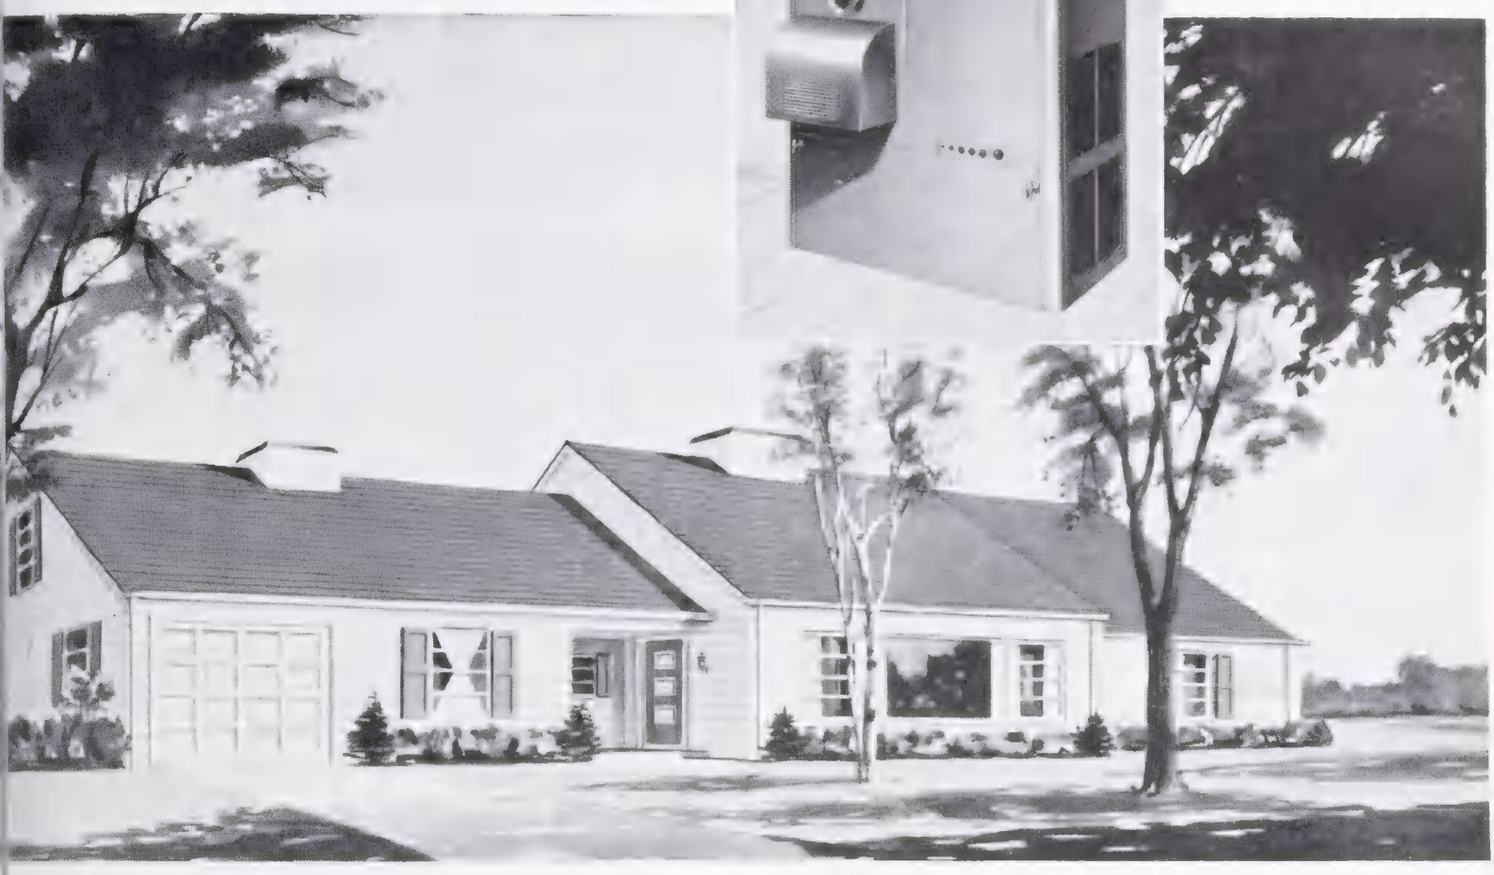
This goes not only for beef, but for all meats. Pink bon mean a young animal; gray bones an old one; i.e., tough mea

Fat should be thick and white. It may have a pinkish ti but never cream or yellow. A thick cover of fat is necessa for hanging. Of course you don't see this when you bu retail cuts in the store. But if perhaps you buy wholesale cu at the locker plant for your freezer, this is important. Wit out a thick cover, there can be no proper hanging. A gre mold grows on the outside of "well-hung" meat. It also gro inward a way, into the fat; it sort of puts down roots. T fat cover must be thick enough so you can trim the mol part away and still have enough fat left for proper flavor.

I've been in a locker plant where the carcasses in t "cold room" had less than a half inch of fat. The man to me that this was such good meat that it didn't need to be hu more than a couple of days. What he meant was, it could be hung.

Here is the important thing to understand about hangin The best beef gets the best treatment. Because the best me has the thickest fat, only the best meat can be hung long enoug The poor old second-rate skinny steer comes out twice badly in the deal. He's not so hot to begin with; and he ca be improved by long hanging. Thus, the signs of proper ha ing are bound to mean good beef.

PORK



If you want to buy good pork, look for three things: Pi meat; white, thick, wax-like fat; fine-textured lean. In po pink meat means it's fresh. And pork should be fresh. Gr pork has been around too long. Another check: touch t lean with your fingertips, or feel inside the ribs; if it's stic to the touch, it is not fresh.

Hard-looking, very white, thick, wax-like fat is the k to top quality pork. It means that (Please turn to page 10

HOW TO BE A WEEK-END COOK

the following things are taken out of the freezer, without too much of a plan in mind except for what looks good for breakfast and what will probably be in order for lunch.

1. A package of Jones country sausage
2. A can of frozen orange juice
3. Two loaves of bread: Russian rye and French
4. Several packages of sliced, cooked meat and cheese. These have been wrapped in foil, two or three slices at a time, whenever there has been a roast, a turkey, chicken or ham in the house; there are also a few packages of cheese slices and boiled ham that were bought specially to freeze. We like to freeze the bread and the makings separately, instead of always making up the sandwiches.
5. A bag of molasses cookies (from the bakery)

Here are the menus that grew from this start:

Saturday Breakfast

Orange Juice
Buckwheat Waffles Sausage Cakes
Coffee

In ten minutes the juice is mixed in a pitcher, the juice of a fresh orange added for brighter flavor, and the sausage unwrapped and cut into slices with a hot knife. The automatic coffee maker is filled and set, and as the sausage sizzles over low heat, the waffles are whipped up from a package of Aunt Jemima's Buckwheat mix. By the time all the family has assembled (in 20 or 30 minutes) the sausage and the first batch of waffles are ready.

Saturday Lunch

Spinach and Lettuce Salad with Ham and Swiss Cheese Julienne
Mustard-Egg Dressing
Buttered Rye Bread
Beer
Fruit Bowl and Cookies

The salad bowl seems like a good idea; it's a warm day and everyone welcomes a relaxing break in the shaded end of the garden. The crisp young spinach leaves (no stems) and lettuce leaves are broken into a big salad bowl. Over the top go thinly cut strips of ham and cheese. The bread is sliced and buttered and the dressing mixed (recipe follows), then tossed with the greens. Forks, paper napkins and plastic-coated paper plates, the bread, beer and glasses, a cookies and a big bowl are all put on two large trays and carried into the g all in ten minutes flat. Kensington is perfect for ice cubes, salads, fruits, flowers in this gracious, spacious Coldchester bowl (above). It's well worth seeking out at $12.50 (matching tongs, $3.50) because of its wonderful resistance to stain and tarnish.

Kensington

has a neutral, yet distinguished air about it. This 6¼" Kingston Vase, at only $5.75, is typical—it flatters flower arrangements instead of overpowering them. You'll find Kensington pieces unobtrusive accents for any decor, period or modern.

Every Kensington gift is smart and useful. It's easy to care for because it won't tarnish or stain, and it never needs polishing. You'll find it at good gift, jewelry, or department stores everywhere. If you don't find it, write us for store nearest you.

rubbed with lemon and liberally soused in a mixture of melted butter and soy sauce. After the first few turns, the chicken is pushed to the outside edge of the grill where it slowly cooks over the gentle heat of the dying coals while you have dinner.

The potatoes are turned into a skillet of sizzling butter and cooked until they are crisp and brown. They are seasoned with salt and pepper and a hefty pinch of marjoram. At the very end a couple of tablespoons of heavy cream are added. Even though the potatoes are frozen at the beginning, they quickly thaw and start to brown. Just be careful the skillet isn't too hot at first.

The asparagus is part of what was fixed three weeks ago, when you bought twice as much as you usually do. Half was cooked and eaten (this is one of our favorite dishes) and the other half was rinsed with boiling water and put into a plastic freezer box after it was prepared. The tender ends were sliced thin to be cooked quickly in a covered shallow pan in butter and no water. To cook it frozen, do it the same way, again being sure the skillet isn't too hot at first and breaking up the frozen block as it begins to melt. Season with salt and pepper.

Sunday Breakfast

Melon Balls
(served with Lime Halves and coarse-ground black pepper)
Frozen Grapefruit Juice
Ham and Eggs Jersey Croissants
Coffee

When you get up on Sunday, you go out to the freezer to get the juice and the bag of bakery croissants. After you fix the fruit and the juice and start the coffee, you put the croissants in a paper bag, twist the top and put it in a moderate oven. You start the egg dish by preparing the little baking dishes on a cooky sheet and heating the ham and cream in the same oven. Then you add the eggs and bake them while the fruit course is being served.

Ham and Eggs Jersey

Thin slices of boiled ham
Light cream
Salt and pepper
Eggs

Use individual ramekins or baking dishes. Put a little cream, a slice of ham and some more cream in each one and sprinkle with salt and pepper. Put in a medium oven. When cream has scalded, drop two eggs on each dish and return to oven until eggs are done.

At noon all you can think about is something cool to drink, so you head for the kitchen to make a pitcher of iced tea. As the tea brews you eye the contents of the refrigerator and decide on a make-your-own kind of lunch. You get the trays you used yesterday.

One tray will hold the plates, napkins, knives, forks and spoons, a platter of sliced tomatoes sprinkled with salt and pepper and fresh-chopped sweet basil from the window box, and a platter of meats, chicken and cheese. This is garnished with sprigs of watercress and the rest of the hard-cooked eggs, quartered. Around the edge go slices of French and rye bread, buttered. There is also a pot of mustard, a pitcher of French dressing for the tomatoes, a bowl of lettuce and a bowl of bleu cheese mixed with soft butter. On the other tray you put a fruit bowl, cookies, fruit knives and the iced tea and glasses.

Iced Tea

4 heaping teaspoons tea
1 pint boiling water
⅓ cup sugar
Juice of one lemon
Sprigs of fresh mint

First scald the teapot and put in tea: pour in boiling water and steep five minutes. Put lemon, sugar and mint in the bottom of a pitcher and strain the hot tea over it. Add one tray of ice cubes and stir briskly. Pour tea into glasses filled with ice cubes and garnished with mint.

This good lunch takes about 15 minutes to prepare, just the length of time it takes to make the tea, slice and season the tomatoes, slice and butter the bread and arrange the things on the trays.

Sunday night, as you bask in the pleasure of your completed project, you decide it would be fun to eat supper outdoors. It's a beautiful still night, so you set the table on the terrace and get out the hurricane lamps for the table and two lamps to place on the ledge above the serving cart.

You go to the freezer to hunt for a hot dish that can be reheated and served in the chafing dish so it will stay hot outdoors, one that will complement the cold barbecued chicken. You come up a quart container of kidney b in red wine, some French rolls this menu:

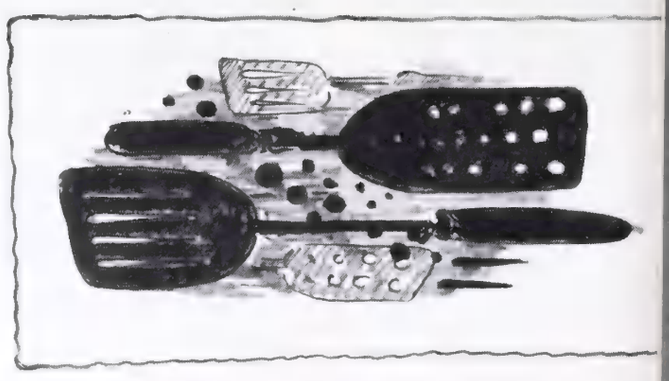
You don't even have to be able to draw a straight line in order to design a pattern for a rug of your own making. Here, as an example, George Wells has taken a pencil doodle (left) and translated it into a rug design.

little can do a great deal. Some of Mr. Wells's rugs have been made in his lap with nothing more than an ordinary five-cent tapestry needle. Think in terms of a coarse warp cloth for rug backing (at $3.50 a yard in needlepoint departments) and a needle such as you use for needlepoint. There's plenty of time for the shuttles and hookers after the spirit of this kind of rug-making catches your wholehearted interest.



Materials? Don't they cost a great deal? Only if you are thinking in terms of an expensive yarn rug. One of Mr. Wells's richest rugs was made from discarded men's suits and required only the trouble of cutting them into strips. (You can cut material by hand or buy an electric cutter to do it.)

You'd be surprised at the wealth in your own closets and sewing boxes, or what friends might contribute. There is no limit to what you can use: old uniforms, old clothes, moth-eaten blankets, scraps from a sewing spree, just plain rags. Of course, you can also buy woolens, already dyed, clean and ready to use. Hanks of yarn are available and bought by the pound average $3.00 for white. Mr. Wells estimates about one-half pound or one-half yard of medium-weight woolen fabric for one square foot of rug with ¼ inch loops. He adds that this gives a fairly heavy rug with a very pleasant feel. (Yarn hooks about seven ounces to the square foot.)

Design? It doesn't need to be a picture of anything. We've shown you how to turn doodles into patterns. But we'd like to emphasize this point: pattern isn't as important as color. Just putting luscious tones together will give you all the pattern interest you might want. Think how desirable it would be to put together colors to enhance your decorating scheme. Colors you can't buy, you can dye yourself.

Do you loop it, hook it or it, braid it or weave it? The radical departure from tradi rug-making in the Wells ru that all kinds of ways are emp as well as materials. He uses ish rug knots for fringed and pile look; he couches down of wool with yarn, he works estry stitch in chevrons with dle: he hooks loops of dif weight and lengths. He puts all together for varied result such varied combinations give derful texture. The old-fash techniques used but one meth a rug and relied on color an tern to furnish interest. Bu can follow Mr. Wells's formul breaking with the established ods, try everything. Quite po you will invent a new stitch way to make a loop. The unt amateur (Mr. Wells is unta has no rigid standards that be adhered to. The very la knowledge gives you freedo daring, keeps your interest al matter how many hours your consumes. This is how am arrive at freshness of effects.

And there's this to be menti A whole family can be engag the same rug. Even if yo speed hookers, two of you can at the same time on a fairly frame. Two people can sit n each other to work on a l rug, or various individuals make separate sections of the rug, off the frame, and hav sections, when finished, appl to a rug backing. Then a member of the family could fill in the background with a hooker. In this kind of rug-m anything and everything goes

You can draw inspiration for rug patterns from the common objects around you. In this case a pancake turner was the source. It might have been a frying pan, a spoon or a turnip.

HOW TO BUY THE BEST MEAT IN TOWN

ıe animal was fattened on corn; nly corn gives pork a fine flavor. ome places specialize in pork fed n the garbage of big cities. Parts f the South specialize in peanut-ed hams, which are delicious, but ıat is something special. In fresh ork, top-notch flavor comes only om corn feeding.

You want lots of fat. Right now, 's the diet fashion to eat lots of rotein, but no fat; we've got to atch the waistline. And how we ate to pay for something we're ot going to use! Butchers com-lain that the customer today emands lean meat. Well, the cus-mer is wrong, and the butchers now it. First-class pork has a ick layer of fat all around it. hink of it this way: Fat is a sign flavor and tenderness. This goes ot only for pork but for beef and mb as well; when you pay for t, you pay for quality.

LAMB

Lamb should have thick fat, hard d very white.

The lean should have a fine ooth texture. This is a sign the imal was young, and was prop-ly raised. Color? The color of od lamb is hard to describe. Let's ll it a medium rose color, lighter an beef. One expert said: "It ould be a 'live-looking' red."

This isn't as vague as it sounds. ok at a cut of lamb and ask urself: "Does this look tired? as it a flat, dull color?" You ll surprise yourself by knowing e answer.

Lamb is different at different asons. This is why there is more gument about lamb than about y other kind of meat, except per-ps bacon. Different people like ir lamb of different age.

In early spring you can get pring lamb" or "hothouse" lamb. is is a specialty of the Easter ason. It is young and tender and licious. The cuts are tiny: a op has an eye no bigger perhaps n an inch across. It has much s fat on it than older lamb. The is somewhat translucent. To say t baby lamb is better or worse n lamb at some other age is t the point. Baby lamb is one ng: older lamb is something e. It's like saying that beef is tter than veal. Maybe you like th. At any rate, you can't get aby lamb" except in spring.

As the year progresses, the lambs t bigger. Now your only problem to avoid getting "lamb" that has actually become mutton. Your key is size; don't pick the biggest chops or the heaviest legs. The "eye" of an average chop should be one to one and a half inches across. A leg of lamb should weigh around seven pounds—no more. Much of what is sold as "lamb" is actually old enough to be called mutton. Maybe you like mutton. Some people say you can't get the real flavor in lamb at all: mutton is the epicure's delight. However, most of the lamb raised in this country is probably best eaten as lamb. Really good mutton is hard to find.

VEAL

The way to buy veal is by color. The lean must be pale, almost creamy, beige-pink.

You cannot judge veal too easily by its fat, because a "milk-fed" veal, which is what you want, is too young to have much fat. Such fat as there is should be a delicate, "clear" white. On absolutely exquisite veal, there can be a slight "marbling" of delicate fat through the meat, but this is never as well-defined as in other older meats.

Because most people won't pay the price of true milk-fed veal, many stores carry veal that is slightly older than milk-fed. The animal got old enough to eat grain, or grass, grow bigger, weigh more, bring a little more money—and get a little tougher. This veal has a definite pink color; the flavor is strong. It's caught between two chairs; it's too old to be tender; and because it is too young to have much fat, it cannot be made tender by hanging.

BACON

Bacon is very much a matter of taste. You like it heavy-smoked? Medium? Light? It can be cured in different ways to give it different flavors. But no matter what, you want to know these tricks.

The fat should be white, not yellow-tinted.

The lean should consist of many delicate strips, preferably pink (though color depends somewhat on the kind of cure used), rather than a few heavy, dark-colored ones.

Don't buy bacon that has all its lean huddled up against the top edge. It's cheaper by the pound, but you're paying for a lot of fat that will melt away in the pan. What's more, it's the same old story: The second-rate meat gets second-rate treatment. Cheap bacon isn't cured with the same care as more expensive bacon.

Bacon should have its lean distributed well down through the width of the slice.

HAM

Ham flavor depends on the "cure" and is a matter of taste. Interesting point: Don't expect standard commercial hams to keep very long. It used to be the point of ham that it kept forever. It tasted the way it tasted because the brining and smoking process made it taste that way, willy nilly. Now, most commercial ham is cured purely for taste, with chemical and short-cut methods of smoking. Tastes good too! But don't try hanging it out in the garage.

SAUSAGE

Two simple tricks: Sausage must be pink, never gray; it should not be heavily flecked with white; if it is, you're buying mostly fat that will melt away.

CHICKEN

In Grandmaw's time a chicken had to have its feet and head on when she bought it, and its insides still inside. This was proof that it was fresh. Of course it was! In that condition, a chicken doesn't last any time at all before it g disgusting. Even with modern frigeration, if the insides are inside, they are bound to m the meat taste "strong."

For fresh-tasting, sweet chick ask for "eviscerated" chicken; t means that the chicken was stantly cleaned when killed. It d not mean that your butcher cle it when it arrives in his mark This goes for turkey too.

Economics of meat: The ab lutely best sort of meat is very pensive to produce. Perfect m is so rare, so expensive, that amounts to a collector's item. O a few stores in the whole U.S. h it for sale. You may not be able find such meat in your town. A you will not often be willing pay the price.

But you have here the key getting the best of what is av able under the particular circu stances, in a particular store, a particular occasion. That is ways the point. At any given pr there is always somebody who g the good meat; it might as w be you. Sometimes you get it s ply by buying veal today inst of pork; by rejecting the infe and picking the better. Mostly get it because your butcher have a different attitude. As s as he knows you know, you'll the good meat all right.

don't fit, forced fitting that leads to splitting or buckling, pesky supply shortages (not enough paint to complete a job, and so on), wasteful or inadequate rates of application. Watch out, too, for levels. Don't guess. Use a carpenter's spirit level. It's an inexpensive tool, easy to use. But without it you are sure to have disappointing results.

4. Abused equipment. Don't bother trying do-it-yourself if cleaning up is a hateful chore. Equipment left dirty quickly rusts or gums up. You'll find yourself spending hours undoing the results of skipping clean-up time—and just when you want to start a new project. Neglect keeps equipment from operating properly, causes frequent trips to the repair shop, accelerates wear and shortens life.

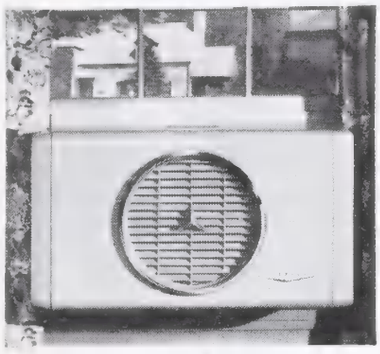
A tri-d is the answer, and there are y number of good ones in the ddle price range. With it use a bble level to help keep your rizons straight.

The selection of lenses will let u take a variety of views, other-se accessible only in distant long ots. A turret-type camera may ovide you with two or more nses, or in some cases your one-is camera can be converted to turret type. With a quick ange of lens, you can pick up tails which might have seemed t in the general scenery, or you n encompass a wide-spread area. riety in shot distance is a basic gredient in making good vacation vies or any kind of movies.

In connection with her work as n specialist at the National Audu-n Society, Miss Dorothy Dingley en looks at amateur footage of nery and wildlife. "Some of it breath-taking," she told me re-ntly, "and some of it is a riot." examples of what-not-to-do, she cited these vacation movies: One had been taken from a fast-moving car. "I've never gotten seasick on a ship or a plane or a car," she said, "but three minutes of this movie were enough to make me downright woozy." Another had been taken on horseback. "The scenery may have been lovely," she commented, "but it never stood still long enough for me to see." Movies are supposed to move, but not clippity-clop like a horse, or whizzing by at 50 miles an hour.

The easiest way to get motion into your movies is to find motion in your subject. Get off your horse and take shots of your companions winding along on the trail ahead. Park your car in a safe and photogenic spot and include a view of highway and passing cars against a background of desert, mountains or lakeside. Motion of this kind gives accent to the surrounding scenery. All it takes is planning.



Another way to get motion is to shoot the same subject from several different angles. The standard advice is to use long shots, medium shots and close-ups. This simple procedure is the best way to make your finished film seem natural and lifelike and so accent your movies.

As for panning, this is the worst of all the pitfalls in beginning movie-making. If you must pan, that is, move the camera while film is rolling, always pan slowly and always, always use a tripod. Don't try to pan when you are using a telephoto lens. Too much jerkiness shows up in the projected film. In general let the camera follow some moving object— a person, an animal, a vehicle.

Remember too that a pan should highlight some special object or view. It should lead somewhere and, when you get there, hold it for a bit. Never pan back and forth or up and down the same area. "Beginners often pan up a mountain and then down," Miss Dingley warns. "I try to help them correct this almost universal error by explaining to them that a panning shot is used to get somewhere; it is not a round-trip."

THE turret-type camera has been invaluable in Miss Dingley's shooting. She most frequently uses a wide-angle lens for groups of people or the wide-open spaces, a one-inch lens for general shooting and close-ups (portraits) and a six-inch telephoto lens for bringing distance shots closer.

On a recent trip to Venezuela and the Caribbean, she shot over a thousand feet of color film with these lenses. In various island ports she was able to get close-up, intimate scenes of people at work along the dock, even before leaving the ship. Using the six-inch lens, she photographed them without their being aware of her presence. "It is often better to set the camera up at a distance," she says, "and use a telephoto lens. Timid people turn away or cover their faces when they see the camera, and untimid ones often mug and glare into the camera. Over and over again I've seen beautiful vacation movies ruined by such shots as these."

With children, however, you can work more closely. Miss Dingley showed me some delightful scenes of West Indian children playing on an open beach. "I set the camera up quite near them," she explained, "and ran it for a while without film inside, until they got used to having me around." This is called a dry-run. The few minutes it takes are well spent for the added quality of your shots. There is also the economy of using film wisely.

Miss Dingley works not only with amateur photographers, but also with such professional naturalists as Roger Tory Peterson and Allan Cruickshank. These men use their films as the basis for Screen Tour lectures given across the count under National Audubon Socie sponsorship. There are 30 film l turers currently in this progra "It was thrilling to see some them going from novice to stud to first-class photographer." M Dingley told me. "I know they a full-fledged movie-makers when, their own volition, they cut out bad shot despite the difficulti they faced in taking it, desp their own admiration for it. T amateur generally uses every sh he takes, even if he can bare make out whatever is supposed be on the screen. He ignores flash blurs or poor lighting. But the go film-maker realizes that such sh detract from the best ones. H knows, too, that he must edit carefully as he has photographe if he wants other people to enj his movies."

On the matter of 16mm vs. 8m Miss Dingley finds that for fam films many people are well sat fied with 8mm. However, s warns, everyone should rememb that the rules of good movie-ma ing apply, whatever the size fi used.

NOTE. A number of 16mm sou and silent wildlife and outdo films may be rented from the N tional Audubon Society, includi such outstanding titles as "Hi Over the Borders." "Private L of the Gannet." "The Story of t Bees." "The River." "Wildlife the Sierra Nevada." "The Web Life" and "Wonders in Your O Backyard." Color slides (for 2 x projectors) may be purchased b in series and separately. THE SEA OF MUSIC WITHIN US t makes no difference whether live far from or near the ocean; re is a sea within us. Whether go down to the sea in ships or on the shore, it is an integral t of our lives. Walt Whitman this:

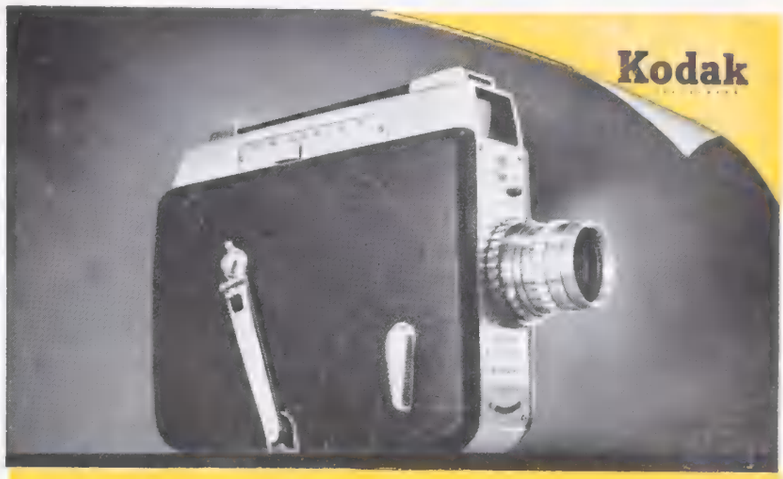
ea of stretch'd ground-swells!
ea breathing broad and convul- breaths!
ea of the brine of life! Sea unshovell'd yet always-ready es!
owler and scooper of storms!
ricious and dainty sea!
am integral with you—I too am ne phase, and of all phases.



is just about 50 years ago that ıde Debussy began to work on e symphonic sketches, later en- d The Sea. He was hardly a d of the sea, having been born Paris and having spent most is life there. He navigated al- t exclusively on the Left Bank he city and never crossed the ntic, though he might well done so to hear his opera per- ıed at the Metropolitan.

ittle physical experience though might have had with the sea, his imagination loved it. "My sea-scapes might be studio landscapes," he wrote to a friend. "But I have an endless store of memories. And to my mind they are worth more than the reality, whose beauty often deadens thought." At any rate, whether he composed in a city studio or composed near a window which looked out on the ocean, he gave us in La Mer the most fascinating treatment of the subject to be found in music.

La Mer is neither descriptive nor abstract music. It's both. Though one critic at its first performance could "neither hear nor see nor feel the sea," we have learned to do all three. You can hardly help hearing, feeling and seeing as you listen to the matchless and marvelous tone poem.

But if you don't want to call the music descriptive, you must certainly call it suggestive. The glitter of the music unmistakably suggests the sunshine dancing on the waves, the undulating movements of the themes and the very shape of the themes themselves suggest the waves, the howl of the storm can be distinctly heard, the wetness of the spray can be felt in the glissando of the strings and the harps, and the might of the rolling breakers can be "seen" in the force of the orchestra's fury during the last movement.

As to this force, La Mer presents an exception to all of Debussy's other compositions. Force is the last word you would think of applying to Debussy. Debussy was the master of the small, the composer who spoke in suggestions, in whispered hints, in shadowy memories, in minute breaths. He never raised his voice. To express his thoughts he created a distinct musical language, a language so unmistakable anyone can recognize it after hearing three or four bars.

WHAT he lacked in loudness he supplied in color. His music has the finest, most variegated, most subtle color. It is born in color; the color is not dyed into it. And that is true not only of the orchestral compositions, where color might be supplied merely by clever instrumentation, but also of the piano works and the songs. Delicacy and color—you will always find them in Debussy. Even in La Mer. Yet La Mer, as I say, is an exception; for once the great subject inspired him to add drama, violence and loudness to color. And with what magical results!

People who like to trace a connection between a composer's life and his work may attribute some of the turbulence in La Mer to the turbulence in Debussy's life at the time he was creating the composition. In the summer in which he was hard at work on the three symphonic sketches, Debussy left his wife Lily for Emma Bardac, wife of the noted financier, a brilliant and very wealthy woman. Debussy left his wife after an unhappy marriage because, he said, the sound of her voice had made his blood run cold.

The immediate result of the break was Lily's attempt at suicide. She wounded herself seriously. The story became kn and all Paris seized avidly o scandal. The following year, La Mer was first played, the dal had not been forgotten. " ish indignation had not yet appeased." wrote one of his fri "And on all sides people ready to make the artist pay c for the wrongs that were im to the man." Other people, ing nothing about the comp personal problems, found the strange and formless.

EVEN at the later concerts demonstrations as well a plause broke out. At one such cert under Debussy's directio disapproval of the audience itself heard even during the sequent number. Jacques Th was about to play a little wo Bach, but had to break off middle of it as the audienc not done hissing.

This all happened less th years ago. Debussy died in Within that relatively shor of time La Mer, like the sea has proved itself endlessly f ating. As one can stare at th for hours, so can one hear th traordinary composition ove over again.

La Mer has no specific pr other than the three titles movements, "From Dawn to on the Sea." "Sport of the W and "Dialogue of the Wind a Sea." Therefore we shall n tempt to tell you—nor could what "happens" in the cou the music. The dialogue b the wind and the waves is less and plotless. What reall pens is that you hear a m piece, a masterpiece which sents both the sea around the sea within us.

It's specially significant year because the National Park ice has just completed resto- n of the original circular kade and one of the hide-roofed dings within it.

Calgary, in Alberta, Canada. The annual Stampede, superlative among wild west shows anywhere, takes place July 5 to 10. Besides notable riding and roping events, at the end of each performance you'll see one of those rip-roarin' chuck wagon races, and chances are good that you'll get to see a wild cow milking contest, including that sight of sights, cowboys running!

California's lovely art colony at Laguna Beach, and its annual Festival of the Arts, July 17 to August 8. You'll like the several open-air art exhibits, the daily art and craft competitions, and especially the traditional highlight of the festival, the Pageant of the Masters, in which costumed tableaux bring to life the most famous art works of all times.

Asheville, North Carolina. From July 20 to 24, the City Auditorium will be the scene of the seventh annual Southern Highlands Craftsmen's Fair. Typical highlight, the Spiel-am-See, staged on floodlit rafts just off the lakeside amphitheatre and featuring this summer Strauss's Die Fledermaus.

Seattle, Washington. Its annual Water Carnival, July 29 to August 10, is an unusually lively spectacle, with five parades, and something like 100 different events, from the Gold Cup Race, world championship hydroplane competition, to the glamorous Aqua Follies, a musical comedy extravaganza with high diving.

Meat again

Comes the good word from Britain: food rationing is over. And this, reminds Pan American World Airways, not only means you can again order meat with the same assurance as at home, but need no longer reserve luggage space for foodstuffs for British friends and relatives, or suffer conscience pangs when they invite you to dinner.

Accommodating cruise

Something to consider, if you are going to Europe after August, is the early autumn Mediterranean cruise scheduled for the lovely air-conditioned "Stella Polaris." Not only will it show you a number of seldom-visited spots, like the Greek islands of the Aegean and the Dalmatian Coast. But it is also, as cruises go, unusually flexible. For instance, if you can't leave from Dover-Boulogne on September 6, perhaps you could make it from Copenhagen September 4, or Lisbon September 10. And you can either leave the cruise at Monte Carlo September 28, or continue on to Southampton, or enjoy a full 36 days of cruising, Copenhagen and back to Copenhagen. Rates are like this: the basic 23-day cruise, Dover-Boulogne to Monte Ca from $450, adjustable, depend on how much you extend the cru up to the full 36 days, Copenha to Copenhagen, from $525.

Chateaux after dark

Particularly if you don't beli in magic, be sure your visit to Chateau Country of France lets view at least one chateau a dark. The dramatic illuminati of the extravagant old castles the Loire Valley have spread some 34 chateaux this year, a to a number of lovely old churc besides, so as darkness falls, whole region seems to glow.

In addition, under the deft ha of Paul Robert Houdin, magic and son of a magician, light a sound are now combined. Ba ground music and narrations o stereophonic loudspeakers are ranged to merge so subtly that effect is magic indeed. At Vill dry, floodlights sharpen the in cate geometrics in the famous gardens. Vast old Chambord, w its bristle of fanciful towers, is extravagantly festive as it m have been in the days of Franci And at Chenonceaux, built asti a river, Diane de Poitiers mi again be holding court.

Tours of the Loire Valley numerous and varied. Better see it in your own hired car. illuminations will be casting t spell each night through late tober. And you will find the r inns of the valley a treat, too.

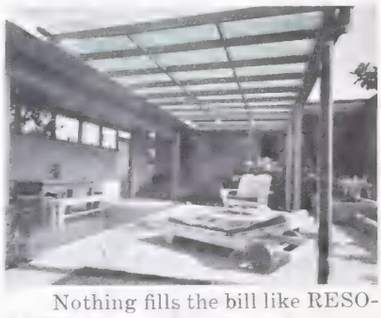
Romantic Lantern

Thought I'd seen every possible version of the hanging lantern, what with the rash of them that popped out last winter. But here's another, and every bit as romantic as the classical Japanese. A cage of Hawaiian wicker encloses, but doesn't conceal, a tall luminous column of white fiber glass which in its turn encloses and conceals the light bulbs—one of those long, tubular affairs that slips easily in and out of the socket when and if you feel a change is needed. Gives you light without making you conscious of where or what the light comes from. Think I'll order one for the front hallway of the old Sturgis house in Southhampton. The lantern may look modern to some people but they'll get a surprise when they see it hanging against that documentary wallpaper at the foot of the white-and-mahogany staircase. Decorative Accessories Corp. makes it and it's on display in the Dunbar showroom.

Half a dozen crabs and a crab trap! Doesn't sound like anything you'd rush out to buy for somebody's living room. But when I walked into the Quaintance showroom and saw "China Sea" hanging there against the wall, I didn't stop to figure out what the pattern was. One look and I knew this was the crispest, prettiest chintz I'd seen in a long weary day of showroom shuttling. Took a few minutes' studying before I discovered what those casually drawn motifs really were. Just what I said—half a dozen crabs and a crab trap. Dripping down between them, like wisteria blossoms dripping from a porch roof, are vertical columns of script, Chinese I guess. The whole pattern is black on white except for the bottom character of each column of script which is a perky coral, just to fool you.



"China Sea" goes to prove what everybody always says about artists but rarely understands—that they are the people who see beauty where few others do. —M. R.

The terrace and garden outside the living room are visually a part of it and freely accessible. Here is an outstanding example of how the judicious use of glass walls can expand the spaciousness of a small house.

(the Straubs have two little girls) contains about 1,200 square feet plus roofed porches and paved terraces. It cost about $9,000, not counting the owners' labor. They estimate that by doing it themselves, they saved four to five thousand dollars. If their house were built where winters are more severe than in Southern California, about the same amount would have to be added to construction costs for more insulation, heavier foundations, etc.

The house has a fine feeling of spaciousness and openness without loss of privacy or intimacy. The central position of the kitchen (from which the children can be supervised as they play in the garden or living room) and of the service and storage units, all between the living and sleeping areas, is the basis of the interior layout. The plan as a whole was fundamentally determined by the long, narrow plot, the desire for inexpensive construction and the preservation of the old olive trees, which were conceived from the beginning as part of the architecture of the house.

The house is related directly to the garden through the extending beams, the lines of the ceiling and floor continuing past the glass walls to the outdoors, and five separate patios: the entry or greeting patio, the living room terrace, the dining porch, the children's play and service area, and the patio of the master-bedroom. The horizontality added to this rather narrow house by all these devices is particularly noteworthy. Planning the house to the plot line, rather than just to the walls, paid off with maximum indoor and outdoor living spaces. Almost every inch of the plot has been made use of in this fashion.

Brief advice to would-be homebuilders, based on the Straub experience: Get all the advice and help you can on major problems, such as design and construction materials to be used, from a competent architect. Apprentice yourself to him when you do the work. Ask questions. Build bigger than you think you need to build at the moment. (You'll need the extra space sooner than you might imagine.) Let the structure become your primary design feature. Let the natural materials express themselves to full advantage, and use them according to what they can best do for you. Keep things simple, but not to the point of poverty (you'll regret it). Prepare yourself thoroughly by reading some basic books; practice carpentry and other do-it-yourself techniques where you are now. Plan as thoroughly as possible according to your own ability, what you will do when you finally build your own home, and what you will contract others to do. The chances are you're far more able than you think to do much of it yourself.

(This is particuimportant where there is a e-thaw condition. Here it is to keep the pebbles barely e the surface so as to avoid basins that might freeze and crack your mosaic.)

Work details—Make a line drawing of your design on wrapping paper the exact size of the mosaic to be done. The mortar should be smooth and firm and at the proper level in the mold (mosaics must be contained between fixed borders) to allow for displacement of the stones. Lay the paper over it and trace the lines sharply enough so that when the paper is removed the lines will show on the mortar.

If your design is complicated, the drawing can be transferred by going over the lines with a pounce (a small wheel with sharp teeth that make a line of holes). Then the perforated paper is laid over the mortar and a black powder, dusted over the lines, penetrates through the holes to the cement beneath, outlining the design.

Use a level or a small plank to keep your work even and tap the surface with a block as you go along. When the area is covered and the stones well set and smooth, you will find that the mortar has begun to harden. Lightly brush off any loose sand and, without disturbing the stones, clean the surface as much as possible with a sponge or damp cloth. Let the mosaic set overnight uncovered.

Next day wet it well and cover it with anything that will prevent it from drying out too quickly. It should take several days at least. When completely dry, a solution of one part muriatic acid to five parts water should be brushed stiffly over the mosaic removing surface smears. Caution: Mix solution in something which is not metal and don't allow solution to touch any part of your body or clothes. Finally, wash your mosaic with water, relax and enjoy it, for you'll deserve it.

WHAT A MAN DID ABOUT A KITCHEN

Remodeling a kitchen yourself is not a simple matter. So if you are going to undertake it, it is obvious you must have a system, as Mr. Hotchkiss had.

His system started with lists—many lists. One of the most important was entitled "Sequence of steps and operations:" Starting with "preparing a rough plan showing all important dimensions," it proceeds to "cut out templates of equipment and arrange on scale drawing," on down through the many details such as location of water, heat and light connections, list of materials to be used for framing, doors, floors, etc., making rough diagrams for plywood, counter material, and stainless steel for economical use and ordering, and listing all materials required.

Since the kitchen had to be in use during the entire remodeling process, one of the most important lists was concerned with the sequence in which various sections would be removed and replaced.

Since the average kit of household tools would hardly be adequate for an ambitious remodeling job like this, a list of the tools Mr. Hotchkiss found essential will be helpful. He used an electric "Shopsmith" for sawing, sanding, drilling and joining; an electric belt sander, polisher and buffer, and a vibratory sanding kit for finishing doors. For the counters, he required a 7-inch electric saw with carbide blade, a utility drill, a portable jigsaw, a soldering kit, and Metalmitre cutters for mitering counter trim. A portable spray outfit and skate conveyors for spraying and sawing plywood panels made the big job manageable.

Mr. Hotchkiss kept a careful record of all the miscellaneous materials, too, things like adhesives, paints, lacquers and the like. For your convenience, we are giving you here a complete list of all the elements which together produced the fine kitchen we show:

WHAT TO DO ABOUT A HOT ATTIC

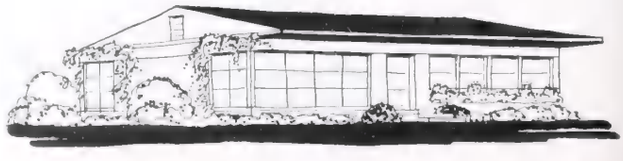
Good gravity or "air wash" ventilation, because it may involve extensive structural alterations is economical only in new construction or where some special feature of the house happens to lend itself very readily to this approach.

MOST of the solar energy striking ordinary, dark-colored roofing materials is absorbed. If, however, a roof is painted white or surfaced with white marble chips or other light-reflecting material, a large percentage of the energy will bounce off, and the quantity of heat coming through into the attic will be reduced to almost the same extent. Technically speaking, the part of the solar radiation which is reflected never becomes heat, as such. It is not heat until it has been absorbed in some solid material, raising its temperature. For practical purposes, however, it is sufficient to remember that solar radiation can be turned away by light-reflecting materials, and that in this way a great deal of heat can be prevented from entering your house.



While white roof paint has been used fairly extensively in Florida and has proved effective and reasonably durable there (House Beautiful, March, page 136), not too much is known about it in other parts of the country. No experience has been accumulated on how often this treatment will need to be renewed under Northern conditions and in areas where there is a good deal of soot and smoke, but it seems obvious that at worst annual repainting would be sufficient to maintain its heat-reflecting properties at the critical time of year. For attic spaces (such as porch and sun-room roofs) which are exceptionally hard to ventilate or insulate, white roof paint seems a likely contender in the Summer Comfort Derby, and it will probably find extensive use in all parts of the country in the near future. It is also an excellent alternative to ivy or planting for keeping sun heat out of masonry walls which soak up heat in the daytime and give it off inside the house at night.

A more permanent means of increasing the summer insulating value of roof construction is the us of heat-reflecting insulation withi the structure. This is a good "d it-yourself" project if your attic i reasonably accessible and well ve tilated and if done in cool weathe before the attic is a bake-oven.

To understand the exceptiona efficiency of reflective insulation i combating sun heat, and the prin ciples governing its proper applica tion, it is necessary to go back, fo a moment, to high-school physic Solar energy, you will remembe is not heat but radiation. It b comes heat when it is absorbed i the roof and conducted through to the attic space beneath. Emer ing from the underside of the ro boards, it undergoes another cha meleon-like metamorphosis and b comes partly convected heat—he in a moving air current and part long-wave radiation—a type of r diation which is reflected by m tallic surfaces. The portion whi is convected heat tends to ris because of the buoyancy of heate air. The part which is long-wa radiation "jumps" across the att space to the floor or ceiling belo where it is again absorbed at again becomes heat—this time heated ceiling right over your hea

SINCE heat does not—cannot travel downward by convecti (through air currents), most the heat reaching the ceiling fr a roof gets there by way of lo wave radiation, and can readily bounced back again with reflect insulation. In order to do this, is not necessary or even desira to install the insulation at the b tom of the attic space. Beca materials which reflect long-wa radiation also do not give it readily, a layer of metal foil on t underside of the roof rafters d a double job: It bounces part of t radiation back against the r boards, and when the air in tween becomes hot, as inevita it must, it refuses to radiate t heat downward to the ceiling low. If the air in the attic space even moderately well ventilated great deal can be accomplished such a layer of insulation.

While we are back to school will be useful to review the phys attic ventilation. One of the first ings we learned about physics is at heated air rises and this, of urse, is just what the heated air your attic wants desperately to , just as desperately as you wish would go away and let you alone. The trouble is that we also want r roofs to shed snow and water d, therefore, build them—most them—in the form of an inverted which is the best possible form to p the heat. In our more recently ilt houses where an opening is vided high in the point of the at each end, a good deal of er-hot air becomes trapped be- en the rafters and cannot leak . When this happens, the under- e of the roof becomes very hot, t is radiated down to the ceiling eath, and the ceiling turned into adiator.

The obvious thing to do about is to punch holes in the roof r the middle to let the hot air , and this is just what is done the metal ventilator units, in the n of miniature dormers, which beginning to appear on the ket. Installed at the highest sible point, as close to the ridge- as feasible, such ventilators let the trapped air and prevent the beneath the roof boarding, and underside of the roof itself from oming very hot, and thus from ating heat downward.

ST which of the three methods escribed is the best way to solve r Hot Attic Problem depends on and your home. It may be that ombination of two or of all e is indicated. Thus, if your is flat or your attic is com- ely inaccessible you may be ted to the white paint method; our attic is easy to get into and d up in and you are not ad- e to a little carpentry, you may t to install reflective insulation perhaps to improve the ventil- n somewhat at the same time. the efficacy of this method de- ds in the last analysis on at moderately good ventilation.

r, if you feel that for some on or other you are in a posi- to do an exceptionally good of "air wash" ventilation, one h will cool all parts of the un- ide of the roof by gravity ac- as is done in new "climate rol" construction by providing ntinuous ventilator along the of the roof, you may be able ly on this alone, in conjunc- with adequate winter insula- Knowing what the basic prin- s are, and how the various ods work, you should be able ck the one best suited to your purse, abilities and house, or by experimentation to determine how far you need to go in any of the three directions.

And there is still a fourth method —mechanical ventilation—to fall back on. Actually, an attic fan should not be considered so much an alternative to other methods of solving the Hot Attic Problem, but rather a device which you may want to have and use regardless.

Once you have such an attic fan, properly installed, you will probably not want to go in for anything elaborate in the way of roof insulation, since if the air in your attic becomes hot, it will be a simple matter to flush the heat out again by turning the fan on for a few minutes in the afternoon, along with operating it at night to bring in cool night air and to create cooling breezes. On the other hand, a roof which is insulated against sun heat and built to provide adequate gravity ventilation is no obstacle to the most important use of an attic fan: that of cooling the lower part of the house and cooling the people in it by creating an artificial breeze.

An attic fan is most useful when your house is normally not too well ventilated, when the bedrooms are partly under a pitched roof, and in areas where still, hot nights are the rule rather than the exception. It is useful for getting rid of accumulated attic heat, for cooling the structure of the house when the temperature drops at nightfall, and as a breeze-maker.

THE main function of the attic fan is to bring down temperatures by cooling the structure of the house with night air after sundown. In many houses, this job can be done in a matter of minutes, because the structure is such that it cannot absorb much heat, and gives it off readily. A light frame house warms up quickly (and reaches higher temperatures in the daytime), whereas heavy construction does not get so hot but takes longer to cool. Once you have an attic fan, you will soon learn how long and how often to operate it to achieve this effect.

Generally speaking, if your house does not "heat up" in the daytime and does not "store" heat so that it remains warm at night, you have little need for an attic fan: a little more money when invested in a room cooler may pay better dividends, especially if really hot spells are few and far between and you usually have as much breeze as you need for comfortable sleep.

Besides using your fan to cool the house, you can also use it to create a breeze almost anywhere in the house by knowledgeable operation of your windows. Since air must come into the house to replace the air blown out by the fan, the fewer the windows left open to admit outdoor air, the faster the air will come in the windows which are open. By observing this principle, if your fan is properly installed and of adequate capacity, you can have a natural-seeming breeze in your living room in the evening, and then switch it to the bedrooms at night, controlling its intensity by the number of windows left open and, if necessary, "wasting" part of the effect in an unused room to prevent excessive air movement in those in use.

Mechanically induced air movement of this kind can do an amazing job of making even the hottest weather bearable, at least after sundown. For example, an analysis of the eight hottest successive days in New York City's history, August 27 to September 3, 1953, made by HOUSE BEAUTIFUL using official New York Weather Bureau readings of temperature and humidity, shows that between seven and eleven in the evening all 32 of the hours involved were above the "effective temperature" which most people consider "hot." The same analysis showed, however, that with a breeze of about one mile per hour, eight of the 32 hours would have been completely comfortable. With a breeze of two miles per hour 16 hours, or half of the total time, would have been acceptable. With a four-mile-per-hour breeze—not too difficult to achieve near the windows of a house with an adequate attic fan—three-quarters of the total time would fall below the "hot" line, leaving only eight hours which would have been regarded as hot by a family making best use of this method of cooling.

THIS is why so many people who have used attic fans in this way describe them enthusiastically as a really effective substitute for air cooling, at least so far as the night hours are concerned. In the words of one such user: "My attic fan means that I can have just as much of a breeze through my bedroom at night as I want and need, besides being able to cool it down before I go to bed. Imagine what it means never to have another hot, stifling night and you can see why I'm such an attic-fan booster."

Manufacturers' literature on a tic fan installation, capaciti needed, and so on is well thoug out and organized and can be f lowed with confidence in planni an attic fan installation if you cide to make one. Fans are n available in horizontal as well vertical form for installation houses with shallow attics, and t type is particularly easy to insta even where full attic headroom available.

As pointed out in the manuf turer's literature, it is important make sure that your attic equipped with adequate outl preferably on opposite sides of attic, to let out the air which fan draws out of the house, a that such openings be protec against weather and, in cold mates, a means provided to cl them in winter to conserve heat. To function as intended, y fan must be installed in an tight enclosure over the opening the ceiling, usually located i central hallway, through which is drawn from the house, or, i is installed in an attic window, the attic itself be air tight—wh is not usually the case. Mod fans have automatic, air or m operated shutters to cover the ing opening when not in use.

In selecting an attic fan, particular attention to the am of sound generated by the m and fan blades when running. W proper engineering, fans can kept free from rattles and un essary noise, and since they used during sleeping hours th exceptionally important. Since fans are competitively price behooves you to make a ca selection to be sure of maxi quality and performance. If sible, make comparisons bet various makes installed in homes of your friends before ciding which one to buy.

AN extremely valuable acce to any attic fan installati a time switch to turn the fa automatically at a predeter hour after you go to sleep, it is rarely necessary to ru fan all night and sometime comfortable to do so. An ade switch of this type costs only one-tenth as much as the fan ($15), so it is a worth-while i ment which eventually pays self in operating current an duced wear and tear on th

How to leave home and write a symphony

By RICHARD WILLIAMS

JOSEPH Haydn, celebrated composer and conductor, was almost sixty when he made the journey from a small town in Bohemia to far away and fogbound London, going first to Vienna, traversing Germany, Belgium and the Netherlands, and then crossing the Channel. The journey had, of course, to be done by stagecoach and in many stages. Friends tried to dissuade him. Even Mozart, an adventurous man, said, "Papa, don't go! You don't speak any languages." But Haydn said: "All the world understands my language," and went.

The fact that he went shows us both how robust was his constitution and how young his spirit. Haydn was ready at a moment's notice for any kind of fresh experience, from an early morning fishing expedition, to new amorous entanglements, to experiments in music. The London adventure, which included voyage, sight-seeing, composing, conducting, being lionized and falling in love turned out fortunately for Haydn. It also turned out fortunately for us, because he wrote the symphonies which are his best dozen.

Haydn's patron and employer, Prince Nicholas Esterhazy, died in 1790, so Haydn was able to accept the invitation extended to him by John Peter Salomon, concert manager, violinist and English music publisher. In London, from March to May 1791, Haydn directed a series of orchestral concerts where his new symphonies, including the "Surprise" Symphony, were performed. Haydn's success was enormous. The Londoners were mad for "the German professor." George III, "who liked no music but Handel's," was so taken with the new music that he and the queen gave a special reception to honor Haydn. The University of Oxford awarded him a Doctor's diploma, a distinction conferred on only four persons since the year 1400.

To acknowledge such a diploma, it was customary for the recipient to send the University a specimen of his quality. Haydn titled a symphony he had composed three years earlier the "Oxford." This was a gracious enough gesture. In addition, he sent Oxford a little song, a canon for three voices, so composed that whether you read it backward or forward, from the top, bottom or middle of the page, it made musical sense.

The little composition is of no importance, except that it exemplifies the composer's interest in musical "stunts." Haydn shared his contemporaries' delight in acrostics and riddles, in all kinds of tricks with words or notes or numbers arranged to make puzzling patterns, to bedevil the ingenuous and astound the naïve. Haydn never lost his fondness for pranks, some of them very simple. Was he therefore a simple man who happened to have a gift for music? No!

Haydn's mind was not simple; it was wide and complex and with room for many things. Nothing is so contradictory as genius. Is it to be believed that Schubert liked to perform the "Erlking" by blowing through a comb? That Wagner was proud of his ability to stand on his head? The mixture of profundity and naïveté, of complexity and simplicity, shows itself in Haydn's music, perhaps, more than in others. His music encompasses religious deliberations, exalting hymns to nature and (in the very same works) imitations of actual sounds of nature which, musically speaking, are primitive.

SIMILARLY, the man who wrote these wonderful and often mysterious, deep and puzzling London symphonies was equally capable of writing symphonies for children's toys or for mechanical birds, and delighted in giving some of his works such titles as "Symphony for Fire Extinguishers," "The Philosopher," "The Schoolmaster" and "The Chicken." These symphonies are forgotten. But the "Surprise" Symphony is something else again. It is one of his most famous symphonies, because of its joy and beauty, not because of its title nor because of the surprise. The alternate title is "Symphony with the Drum Crash." Either title is due to the second movement of the symphony, where, after a soft passage played by the strings, a drumbeat comes in unexpectedly. Here again you have a trick, a stunt. But you also have great music. Legend says that Haydn noticed a few somnolent people at one of his London concerts. He wanted to take revenge on these inattentive folk by first lulling them with a quiet passage and then waking them up suddenly.

"Here," Haydn said, "the ladies will scream." Whether this legend is true or not, whether the ladies screamed or not, it is certain that the surpise in the "Surprise" Symphony has by this time become as unsurprising as the discovery that Joe, the fat boy in The Pickwick Papers, is asleep. It is equally certain that the G Major Symphony need not surprise us at all to enchant us.

It is one of Haydn's finest sym-

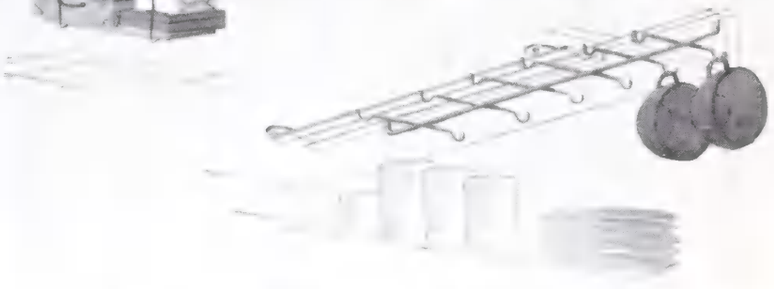
Squeeze the last inch of use out of your storage

There's a world of hangers, hooks, gadgets that convert bulk storage space to your needs



By JULIE POLSHEK

Use fixtures that expand closet area to make the most of whatever closet space you have. Take advantage of storage devices that utilize closet doors and walls, of carrier rods that afford you "in-the-open" garment selection. Organizing contents of closets brings about ordered tidiness along with new convenience.

Utilize hardware such as Add-A-Pair Shelf Hangers that create storage facilities in attic or basement. You use joists as the suspension means. Interlocking hangers afford any needed multiple arrangement.

With traveling holders for cups or tumblers, you can utilize the furthermost recesses of your cabinets. There's also less likelihood of breakage. This Gray rack is rubber-coated for that reason.

Pots and pans with traveling holders can also eliminate need for stacking and unstacking and give new usefulness to low cabinets whose contents are otherwise inaccessible.

WHO Spends Two Dollars For a Dust Cloth? AND WHY?

Two dollars is a lot of money for a dust cloth. At that price, who buys them? Here's a partial list of buyers of our Conniver, whose names may be familiar to you:

Mrs. Ben Hecht—he co-authored "The Front Page"
Lillian Hellman—you know her from The Theatre Guild
HMS "Queen Elizabeth"—best known ocean liner afloat
Countess Mara—the well known necktie people
Mrs. Samuel F. B. Morse—a name we all know
Ilka Chase—if you read, or watch TV, you know her
U. S. Library of Congress—and N. Y. Public Library
Kenneth Roberts—he wrote "Northwest Passage"
The Mark Hopkins Hotel—San Francisco's finest

Should you spend two dollars just because these buyers did? No, not necessarily. But you should know WHY they splurged—so that you can decide for yourself.

Here is Why the Buyers Buy . . .

People buy Conniver (and then buy it again!) because it absolutely ends dirt-cling. A touch on any surface—wood, glass, metal, porcelain, plastic or leather—and it instantly applies a tough but invisible film that simply will not hold on to dust or dirt. The result is that anything wiped with Conniver is afterward beautifully cleaned and polished with just a flick of the cloth. That's because Silicone is the finest "release material" known to science. (A release material keeps anything from sticking to anything else.) Reader's Digest has raved about it. Big industry uses tons of it. And Conniver contains more Silicone than any other maker has yet been able to get into a cloth! And the Silicone stays in, too.

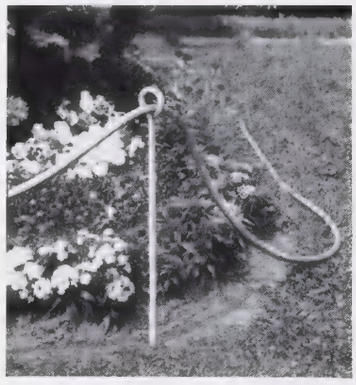
Use Conniver on woodwork, furniture, mirrors, porcelain and chrome kitchen appliances, windows—everywhere in your home. It won't hide or discolor any finish, but it will enhance lustre. Get one for the car, because then you can wash it dry, with just a wipe. By the way, regular use of Conniver prevents the formation of both rust and tarnish. Nice to know that, if you own silverware, or if there are guns, golf clubs, garden tools and such around the house.

You clean Conniver just by shaking it. Or, if you prefer, dunk it in a mild detergent solution. It will come up smiling, because the Silicone is there for keeps!

We Guarantee It—To the Hilt!

We just don't know how to write a stronger Guarantee than the one we've put on Conniver. We say that if Conniver doesn't do everything we promised, we'll instantly refund your money—and you may keep the cloth! There are no strings on this. You are the judge.

Conniver buyers know that every word we've said is true. You will know too—so mail us your order right now.



We sell Conniver in two sizes. The standard 12x18-inch Conniver is $2.00 (or three for $5.00). And the double-size 18x24-inch deluxe Conniver is $3.50 (or three for $9.00.) We pay the postage, but we cannot accept C.O.D. orders.

You buy Conniver by mail—only from us in all the country. And we Guarantee that you'll be glad you did!

Amazing New Magnetic Action Sweeper
Catches ALL Dust, Lint, Grit, etc.

SWEEPS HOSPITAL CLEAN—WITHOUT DUST!

This amazing sweeper — with magnetic action — actually catches lint, hair, threads, sand and grit that resist old-fashioned sweeping methods! Magnetizes every bit of dirt — forms it into actual clusters so that your floors are swept cleaner than ever before possible! Particles of dust cannot rise into the air and settle on drapes or furniture. Slim, compact Magnastat blade gets under radiators and furniture—into corners no broom can reach. If you suffer from dust allergy or if infants play on your floors you can't afford to be without one.

Unconditionally Guaranteed!

Use Mrs. Damar's Magnetik Sweeper — the only sweeper with the new Magnastat blade — on hard-surfaced floors in your home . . . on linoleum, hardwood or tile. It makes your floors hospital clean. Only $3.95, delivered. Send check or money order today!

MAKE THIS FREE TRIAL TEST!

Sweep floors as usual with your present broom or mop Then go over them with this remarkable new invention. You'll be amazed at the unbelievable clusters of dirt, lint, thread, hairs, sand and grit that escaped your old-fashioned method. You must be convinced that Mrs. Damar's Magnetik Sweeper cleans floors better than any other sweeper, or return for full refund.

Air is to a plane what water is to a steamer. A plane's propellers bore through the air as a ship's cut through the sea.

HOW TO LEAVE HOME and like it

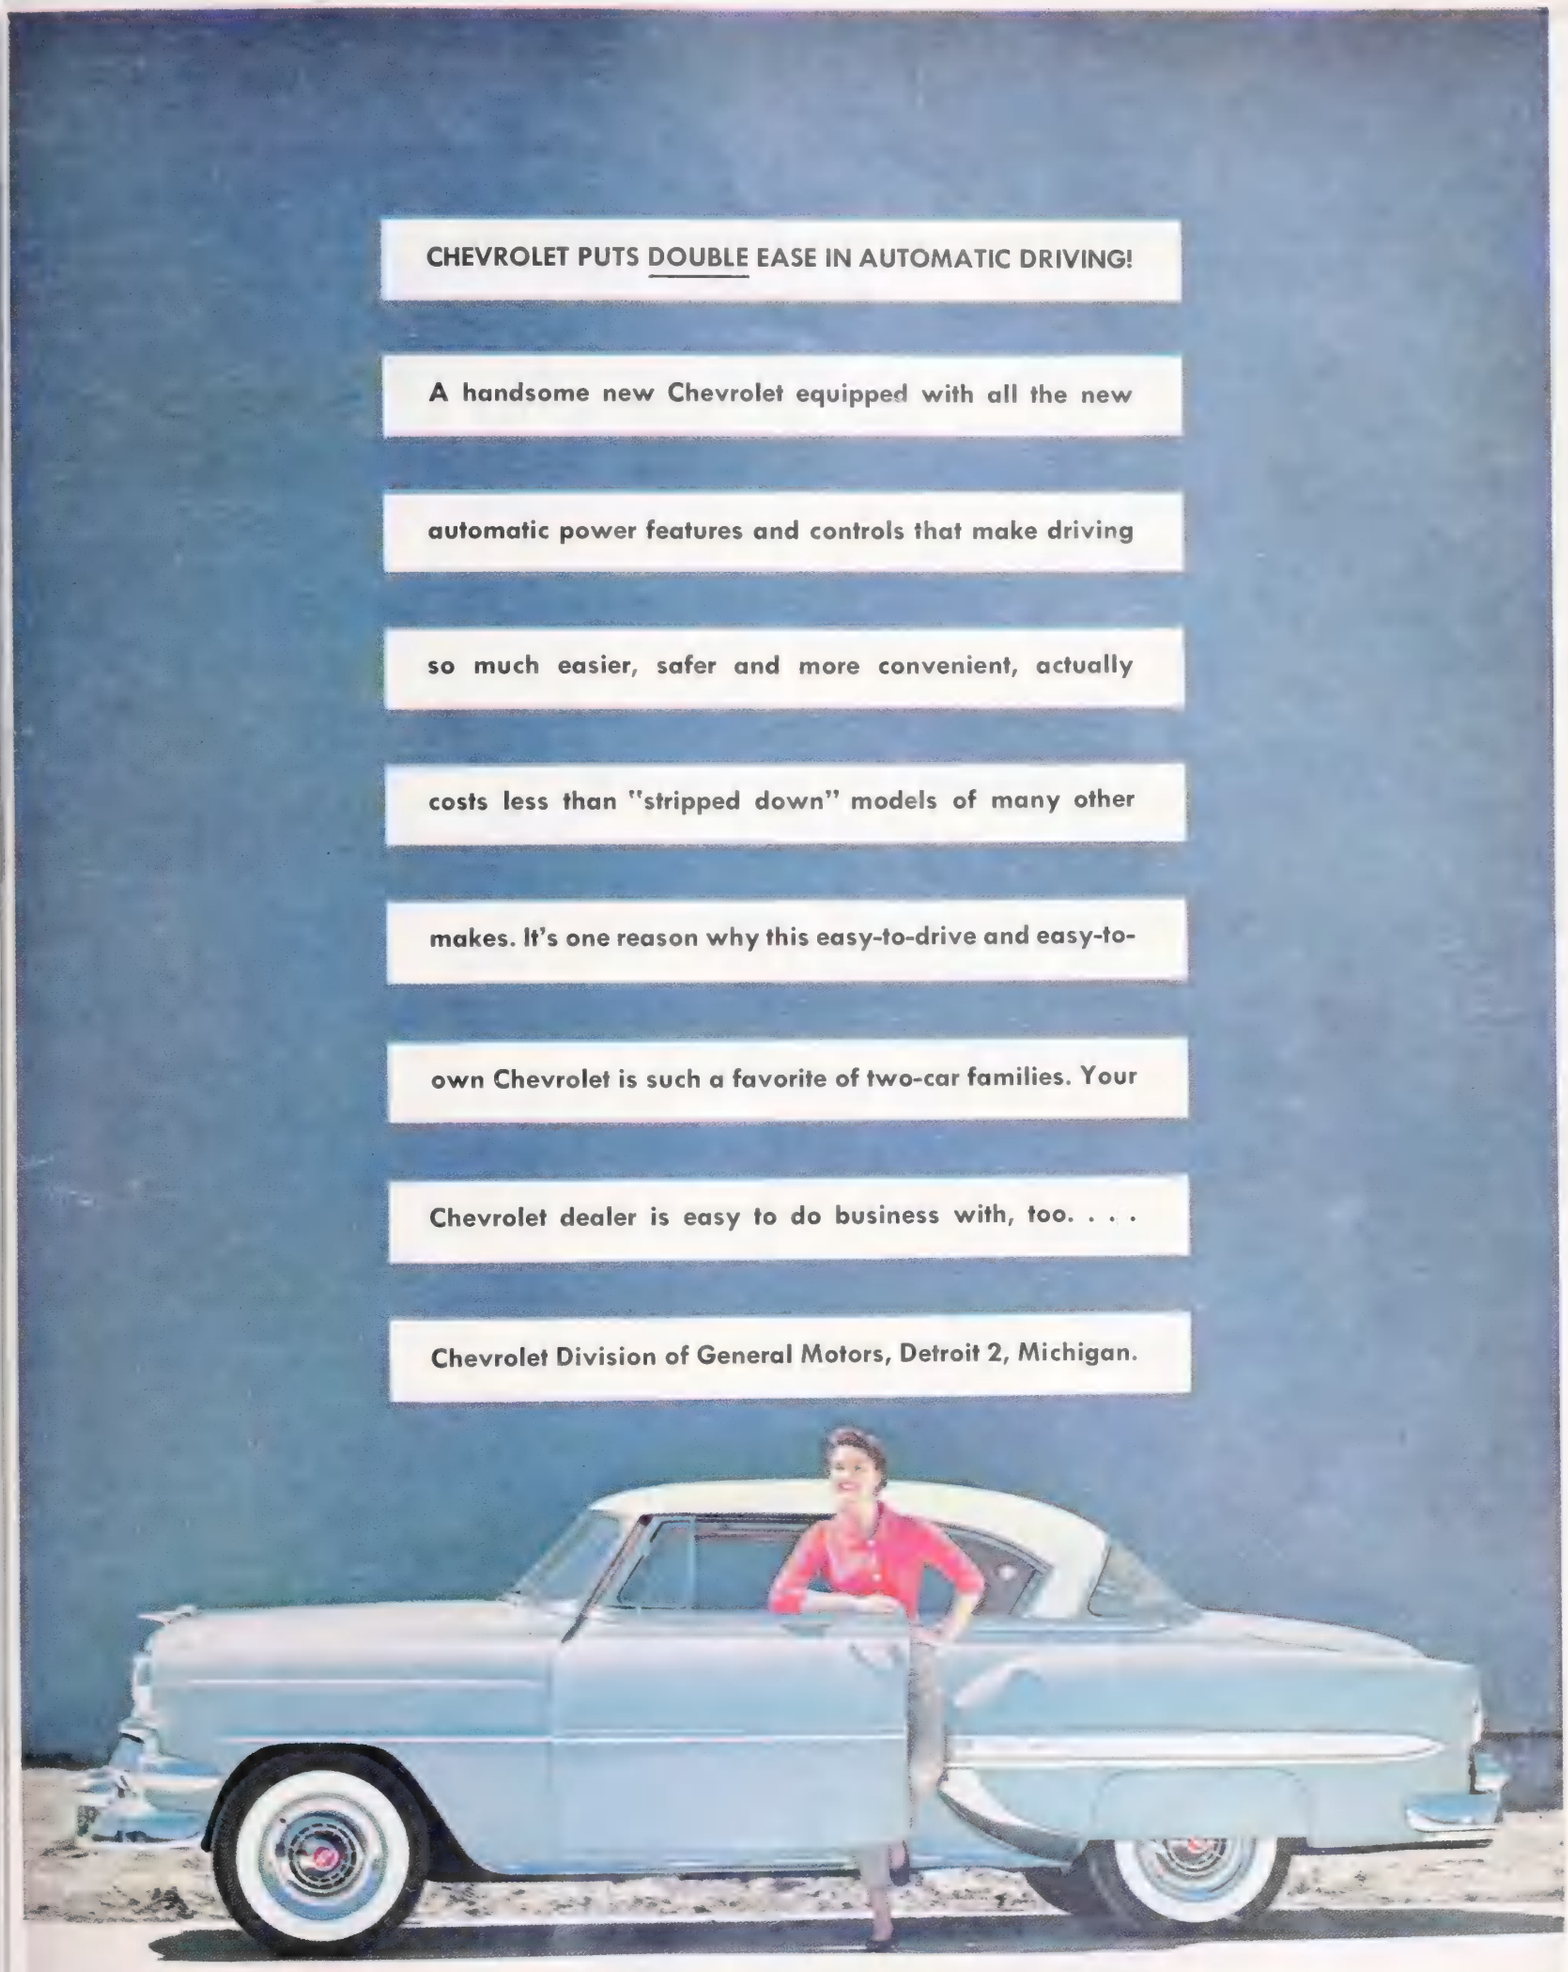
By LOUISA M. COMSTOCK



Not long ago we took a ride in one of the new DC-7's that both United Air Lines and American Airlines have put into service between New York and the West Coast. We were terribly impressed, of course, by the placid speed of the thing; it cruises at 365 miles per hour, is capable of doing 410 m.p.h., and seems remarkably calm and tractable for a vehicle powered by the equivalent of 13,000 horses. We learned that for $174.74 tax included ($332.09 round trip) it could take us from New York to San Francisco in 9½ hours, that the S. F. to N. Y. time is usually less than 8 hours. The flight is loaded with luxury—meals kept hot or cold electronically, traveling babies regaled with every amenity from strained carrots to talcum powder, cocktails on the house, plenty of room for 58 passengers to stretch their legs.

But the most memorable part of the trip was a heart-to-heart we had with the pilot, United's Captain Slim Fay. For we are of that race of air travelers known as Listeners. The minute we step into any plane we become miserably, chronically alert to every whisper of the engines, doggedly expecting the worst at the slightest change of sound or rhythm. And we suspect our name is Legion.

So, right out of the pilot's mouth and corroborated by representatives of United, American, TWA, and Pan American, here are some facts about airplane noises that should save a lot of Listeners a great deal of needless worriment.

First, put yourself at ease by expecting to hear changes in engine sounds any time during a flight. (Please turn to page 107)

Where to keep the good things for the good life

The good life is the full, abundant life. And it means you must have plenty of room for the abundance. Possessions don't guarantee the good life, but they provide a material basis for it. They give you the possibility for variety instead of monotony, for richness of experience, instead of poverty of existence.

Some things we want without stint: books, music records, food supplies. Some things we want for efficient housekeeping, to save us time for better things. Some things we want for expanding our pleasures: garden tools for flowers and vegetables, barbecue grilles for cooking meat, a freezer for our own-made ice cream.

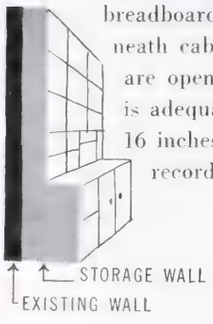
We need space for our private pursuits: looms for our weaving, brushes for our painting, jars for our pebble mosaics. We need space for our changing moods, for our changing dishes and linens, patterns and colors, for being whimsical or serious, formal at one time and informal at another.

We need plenty of storage space for the plenty around us. So in this issue we undertake to show you how other people have found room for the good things of the good life.

Best way to gain space:

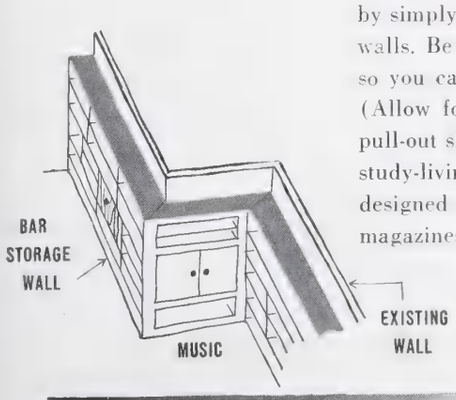
Cut a thin slice off the room and turn it into a storage wall

Without seeming to give up any living space or making awkward structural changes, you gain astounding quantities of storage space this way. And your room does not look smaller. Why? Because the eye does not catch little changes of but 10 to 20 inches



TWO PHOTOS BY MAYNARD PARKER

DESIGNED AND EXECUTED BY STIG CHRISTENSEN



Architectural interest results from building storage around openings such as doors or windows. Depth or "reveal" made adds strong pattern to a wall. Owner himself built shelves here of redwood. Desk pulls out, like a breadboard, and is supported by underneath cabinet doors when they are opened. A 9-inch depth is adequate for books; 16 inches for radio, record-player and records.

Make order out of the disorder of small things like bottles, glasses, books, etc. by simply building a thin skin of shelving along your walls. Be sure to measure what you plan to store so you can arrange the exact space required. (Allow for expanding needs too.) Note compact, pull-out shelves (right) for musical scores in this study-living room of Dr. and Mrs. Arthur Lazar, designed by Gustav Friedmann. Even large magazines and art portfolios generally take no more than 12″ in depth.

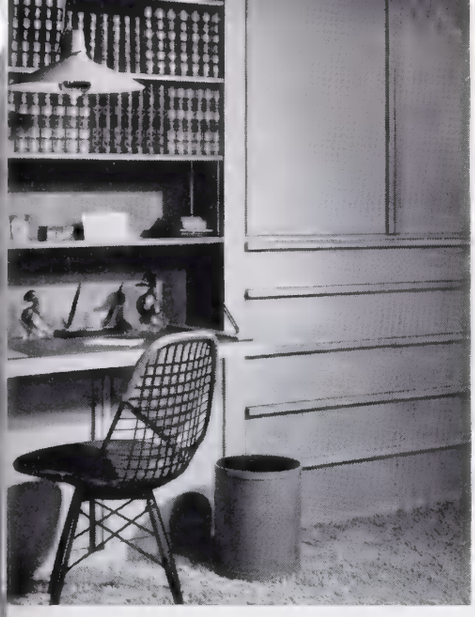
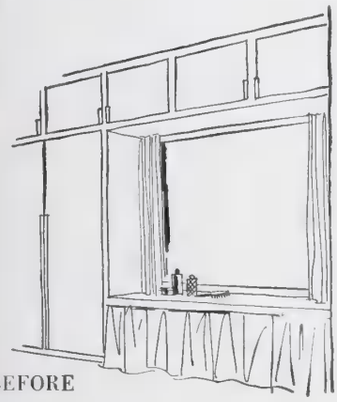
With a surprisingly small slice taken from a room you can add surprisingly large storage room, and it will barely reduce your free, living space



APARTMENT BEDROOM OF C. WILBUR FOSTER, INDIAN



Plenty of everything and everything in its place—that is the way to live life abundantly, the way to have variety without clutter. To have storage similar to this built into your home, look for firms that make millwork, ask them to recommend a designer. A shelf 12 inches deep will hold hats, folded garments, shoes, purses and the like. You need a 24-inch depth for hanging clothes and at least a 48-inch-long rod. (For all storage measurements, write to University of Illinois, Urbana, Illinois, and ask information about Bulletin 557.

Hobbies, whether writing, painting or sewing, are part of the full life, but need not overflow the small home if proper space is provided. Here panel lets down to make a desk. If there is not enough depth for this solution, you might still have a desk by using a slide-out drawer supported by brackets. When not in use, everything closes up, takes up minimum amount of room.

Don't let a window stop you from building a storage wall. For you can either build around it or, if it is unneeded, board it up, as here, and use new wall space fully. Storage space can actually be very handsome space when well designed and architecturally integrated

TWO PHOTOS BY CHARLES TOTTEN

Dining room storage should be visible and accessible, compact and convenient. Although this is a new home by owner-architect Robert Mosher, the storage wall shown could easily be added to almost any dining room. Note provisions for vertical as well as horizontal stacking, use of shallow drawers at right for table linen. Note too in photo at left how beautifully integrated and unobtrusive storage wall becomes when closed. Dimensions for dinnerware, table linen, etc. are all in University of Illinois Bulletin 557.

Storage space can often be found in the wall itself. If insufficient, several more inches can be borrowed from the room. Kitchen cabinet (below) is a total of 8 inches deep: 5½ inches were found in section of wall between the supporting studs. Other 2½ inches barely extend into room and actually give it a decorative effect. Sinking cabinet thus into wall takes minimum of space from a room. Ending it above floor line allows visual spaciousness.

Even the panels covering a storage wall can be made useful, as here. Architects William Stephenson and Burton A. Schutt cleverly designed this folding table from a panel in the storage wall for use in sewing, designing or any home project. Storage under the table contains sewing machine. Wood is combed plywood and striations are neatly adapted to making table and legs invisible when folding into wall.

The change produced not only more storage space but more counter space. Pull-out shelves, between top and bottom cupboard doors, tripled the flat space for serving. Only loss was space for hanging the painting. Door and window became more interesting when framed by the 17" "reveal".

After this storage wall was added friends of the family failed to notice that anything had been changed. Pull-out shelves added more serving space. Construction data on page 108.

Break out a wall to solve your storage problem

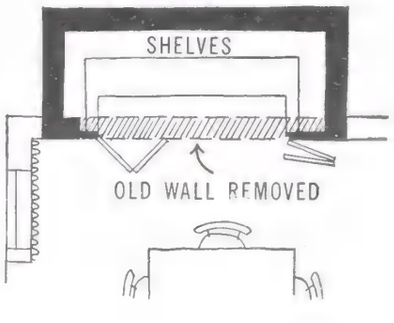
ALL PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

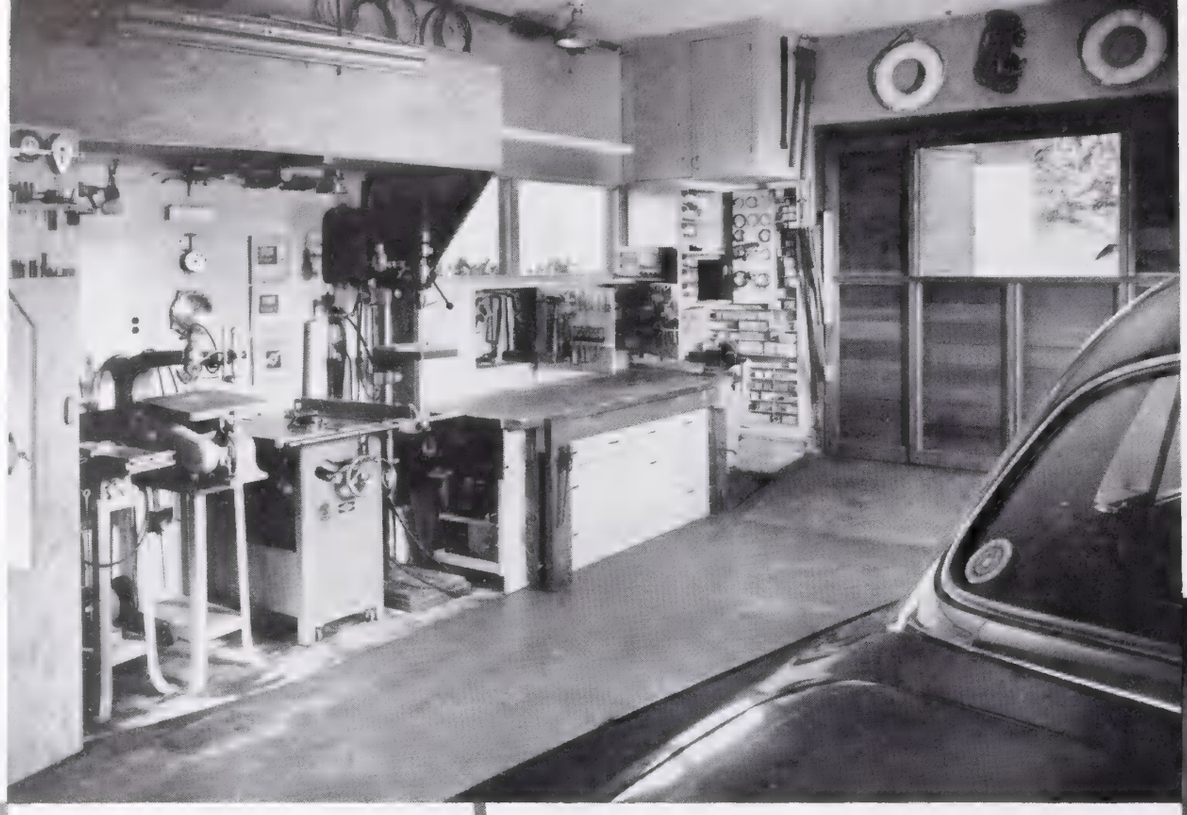
A dressing room with adequate clothes storage was added here to an existing bathroom. The wall of the bathroom was broken through for a new door (see drawing, left) and an entirely new room was built for dressing and storage space.

The dressing room itself (above, left) was designed for an exceptionally tall man. The floor to ceiling open-shelf unit, visible in the mirror, is noteworthy: You can see everything and can easily reach what you want. Cut-out in drawers is large enough to display contents.

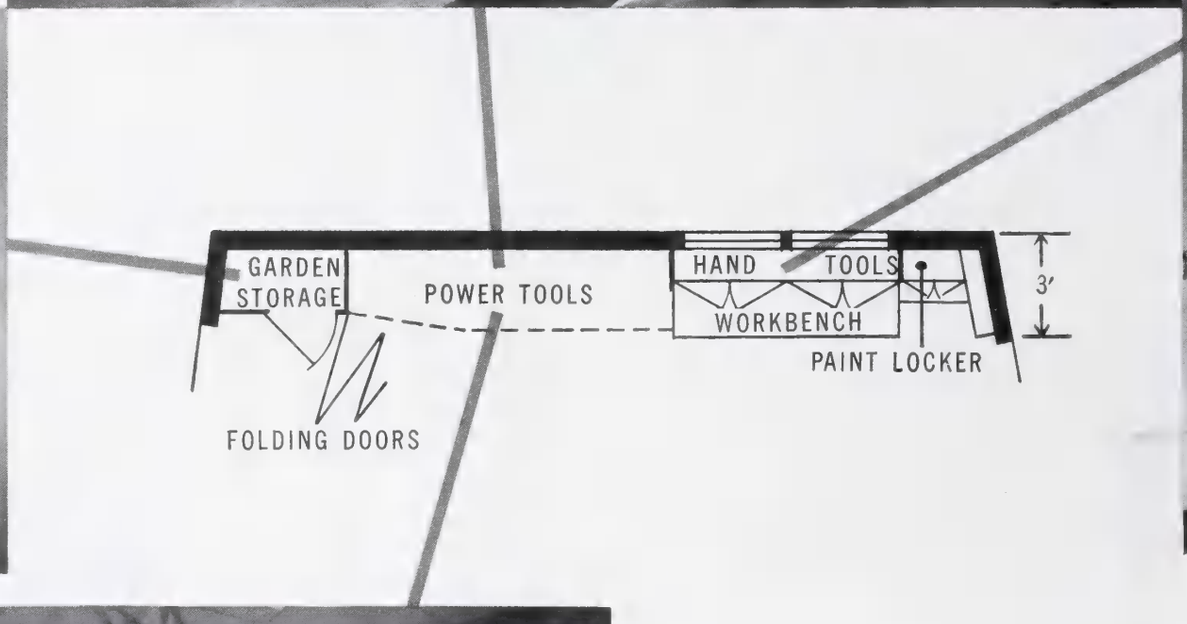
In bathroom (above, right) drawers were remodeled to match those in new dressing room, seen through doorway. A new lavatory and medicine cabinet were added. Lutah Riggs, architect.

After you have exhausted every possible place where you might find storage space—by cutting a thin slice from a room, using wasted spaces under a staircase or a sloping ceiling—then consider breaking out a wall, as here

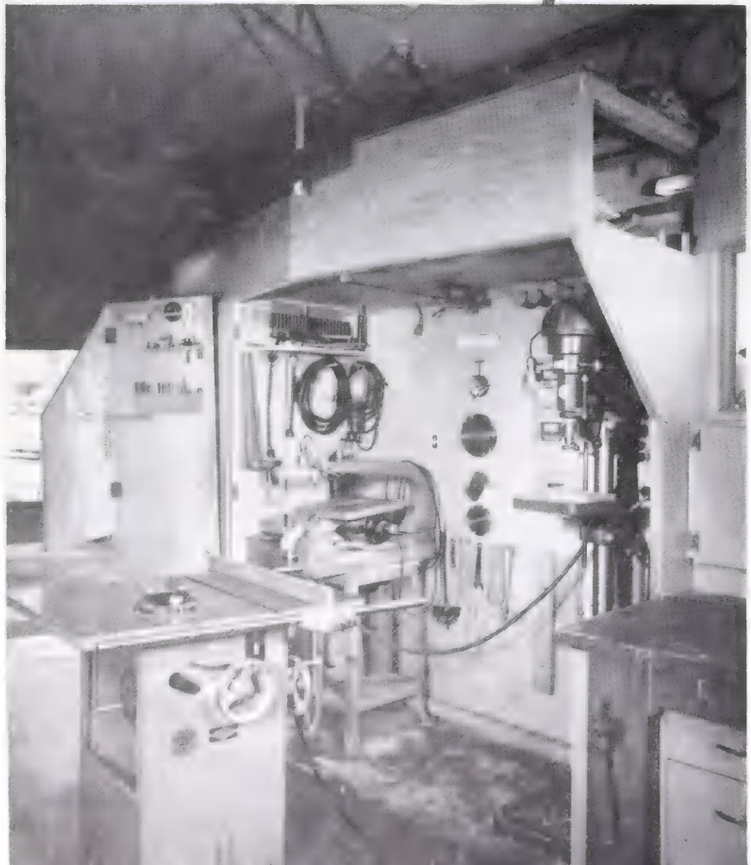




Built-in buffet and music cabinet were created in this dining room by breaking through an outside wall and constructing new storage space (see drawing, right). Immediately to right of buffet is an added walk-in dish closet (not shown).



Cabinet (above, right), painted black, has a black Formica counter. Brass ship's cleats are used for drawer pulls. Besides storing dinnerware, silver, table linen, etc., this cabinet also houses record player, loud speaker and record albums.



When the folding doors close (above, left), they not only conceal the new storage wall but add architectural pattern to the dining room. This further demonstrates you can achieve both storage space and harmonious décor if you plan well.

Whole workshop, within 3-foot strip of garage, can be entirely shut up when not in use. Drawing above indicates how doors fold back to disclose power tools. It also explains compact planning of this storage wall. Power tools (left) are mounted on retractable casters for mobility or steadiness as desired. Lengths of lumber up to 8 feet can be stored in closed space above power tools. If you can't spare 3 feet from your garage, you might add it and so achieve new storage and workshop space as here. In any case, be sure to consider your garage thoroughly when you look for additional room. It is the cheapest covered space you possess.

The Philosophy

Seasoned travelers know that the secret of comfortable travel is to travel light. They may not go as far as Herman Melville did when he went to Palestine on a leisurely tour with only a carpet bag to hold his clothes, but the age of nylon and dacron makes even this a possibility. In travel, for the sake of mobility, one cheerfully gives up a good part of one's daily equipment, for one knows that if, like the snail, one carried one's house on one's back one would move only at a snail's pace. The virtue of travel lies in this freedom of movement and the sense of detachment it promotes. To be alone in a hotel room, in a strange city, is to come face to face with a different person, largely because in both time and space one is cut off from all one's possessions.

For some curious reason, the renunciations and the sacrifices the traveler properly makes in order to move about easily have now been carried into the dwelling house. From the way a good many modern houses have been designed, one would think that the mobile life were the only possible one open to modern man. To reduce the house to the size of a trailer, to throw out of it all objects that would stand in the way of free movement, to have nothing at hand except what is of immediate use—these seem to be the underlying beliefs of many supposedly progressive architects today. Actually the new house will probably remain in existence at least a couple of generations; and likely enough the owner will stay in it all his life, punctually leaving for the office in the morning and returning home the same evening. But it will be planned as if it were on wheels and must be lightened of every discardable bit of equipment, because it must take to the road. Except for a few clothing closets, you will search the house in vain for a bit of adequate storage space.

Now I maintain that the mobile life and the settled life are as different as the North Pole and the Equator; they have different purposes, they open up different possibilities, they require different kinds of equipment and a different allotment of space. A house designed for all-year family living should not be conceived as if its owners were gypsies, living on what they can forage. On the contrary, it should be full of ties and bonds and possessions, both material and sentimental.

The very things that the traveler must forego in order to enjoy travel—the variety of a full wardrobe, the little keepsakes and treasures that bind his present life to his past, his library of books or phonograph records, all sorts of familiar gear—are what is needed to keep a family together through the years. A permanent dwelling house, in contrast to the traveler's hotel room, is a place that promotes every manner of attachment. Is it not this very contrast that gives travel its immense stimulus and homecoming, the return to the familiar, its deep sense of reassurance? A family and a house imply stability and continuity in social and personal relations; and this very quality of a settled life also brings the possibility of choice and variety within the four walls of a home that the traveler can achieve only by moving about from one place to another. To make the most of these possibilities of family life, one must understand and provide for the most neglected function in modern architecture: the function of storage. Without adequate space for storage only a hand-to-mouth existence is possible.

My own philosophy of storage took form in the very act of growing up and helping to create a household capable of enfolding all the activities of a family; and it is only recently, I confess, that I have come to understand its full significance. When my wife and I were married, we both disdained possessions. Though I was a writer, the greatest number of books I felt necessary to have around me was at most a hundred: "The rest," I used to say, with high Emersonian scorn, "I keep in the Public Library." We both wanted to be footloose and free. Even to own a house seemed an intolerable commitment. That bachelor sense of freedom, that scorn of possessions, that unwillingness to lend ourselves to the process of accumulation, caused us to dismiss the whole problem of storage. We were oblivious to the fact that part of our freedom was due to our parental households both having cellars in which various possessions of ours—sometimes indeed the contents of a whole apartment—would be temporarily stowed at no cost to ourselves.

The first drag on this unfettered, mobile, detached life came with our first child. His gear and tackle made the problem of moving increasingly difficult; and within two years we had bought a house with a big cellar, where an increasing accumulation of things, boxes, traveling bags, unused equipment, files, could be stored along with the coal. Despite necessary periodic clearances, our possessions piled up, and with them a great sense of security and stability, too, as we found ourselves with the space to keep items of only occasional use for nursing the sick, say, or entertaining unexpected young visitors.

By now, the writer who once scorned to own more than a hundred books finds it necessary to have between three and four thousand on hand, and every year he prowls around, like a cat looking for a drawer to hold her kittens, seeking some unused wall of some hitherto uninvaded room to hold the annual overflow of books. In our old farmhouse, two small rooms are allotted to live storage, while the attic and cellar both serve for dead storage. For less perishable equipment, we likewise have the loft over the garage—five store rooms in all. Since this old house was conceived without any thought for functional storage, our use of this space is not as efficient as it could and would be in a new house. But the facts of family living tell us how richly we have profited by all this extra storage space and how not a single part of it is really wasted.

Behind this personal experience of the need for storage space lies a philosophy—a philosophy of the nature of the human organism, a philosophy of family life, a philosophy, for that matter, of civilization itself.

Let us begin with a look at civilization. What we call civilization, to distinguish it from the unstable life of roaming hunters and herdsmen, began with a settled life, attached to a permanent dwelling with other buildings and utilities, barns and granaries and bins, that served for storage. With the cultivation of the hard grains, it was possible for the peoples of the Nile, the Tigris, and the Euphrates valleys to carry part of their food supply over from year to year by hoarding it in granaries. That surplus food, that surplus energy, gave a measure of security and freedom that had hitherto been unavailable, since the produce (Continued on page 110)

of Storage

Only 20 inches of space = new guest room

By LAURA TANNER

As editors who are constantly visiting and studying other people's houses, we have seen too many huge and disorganized walk-in closets to believe that good storage facilities are a matter of vast amounts of space. On the contrary, neat and organized storage depends primarily on how you use the space you have, how you apportion every last inch of it, be it ever so skimpy.

If, for example, you live in an old house with the typical problem of an out-jutting fireplace flanked by short, useless stretches of wall, you may have a treasure of storage space right before your eyes. On these two pages you can see how decorator Donald Pelham developed guest-room facilities in the living room of an apartment house by utilizing a 20-inch jog in the wall that occurred beside a fireplace. Within this embrasure, which is only as deep as the 20-inch chimney reveal and 5½ feet wide, he created an enclosure for a folding Murphy bed. Now the fireplace is flush with two matching sets of double folding doors, a device that improves the room architecturally and decoratively as it creates new storage space.

12 storage spaces

Under sloping ceilings
Here's an area that doesn't deliver its share toward living as long as it remains unused. Close it in and compartmentalize the space and it really goes to work for you. This and the other three storage units shown here are easy to build yourself.

Great use from a thin slice of wall space
Often a slim cabinet brings order in the kitchen, bath or children's room for miscellaneous things. Plans for making this from plywood are available free from Douglas Fir Plywood Association, Tacoma 2, Washington.

Put doors to work, too
This combination built-in even puts its doors to use for storage. The whole unit is plywood, can be made at home or to order (see Douglas Fir booklet #31). Use it singly or in groups to cover a whole wall. Tailor fittings to your needs.

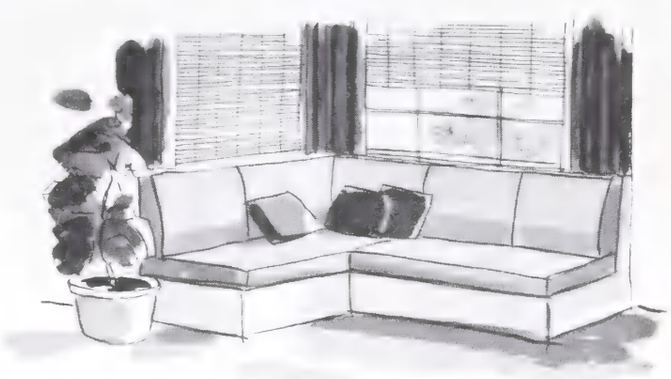
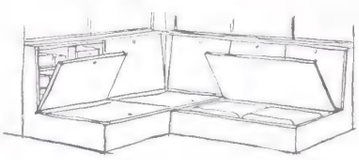
Demountable music wall
Instead of a clutter of individual pieces, here's a way to get all your music equipment, including records, into one unit. Sections are interchangeable, may be arranged as desired. Details and materials are included in Douglas Fir Plywood booklet #8.

Is your luggage working for you?

Don't store luggage empty: use it for blankets or anything that can be folded or stacked without difficulty. Inventory list on door records what each case holds: out-of-sight storage places are of little help unless you can check quickly to know what is stored where.



Where to put gift wrappings?



Here's a way to keep fancy wrapping paper handy and wrinkle-free: Slip it under a rug in an area where foot traffic is light. Protect it top and bottom with cardboard (good way to store big pieces of cardboard). Put between rug and underpad if floor below is rough.

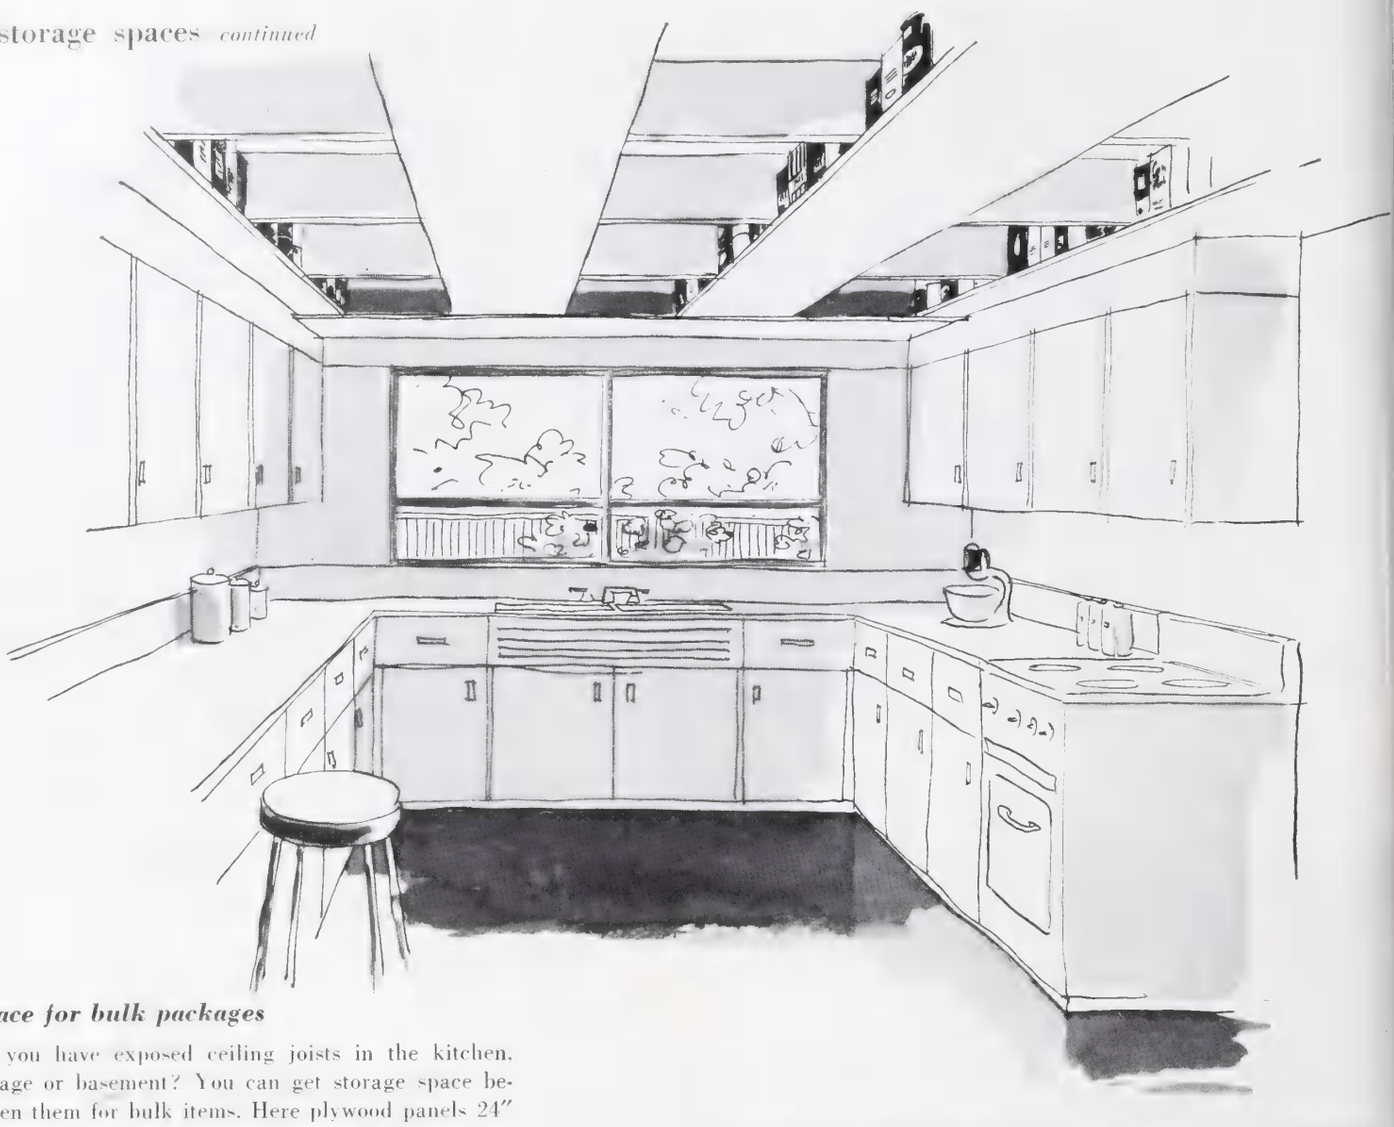
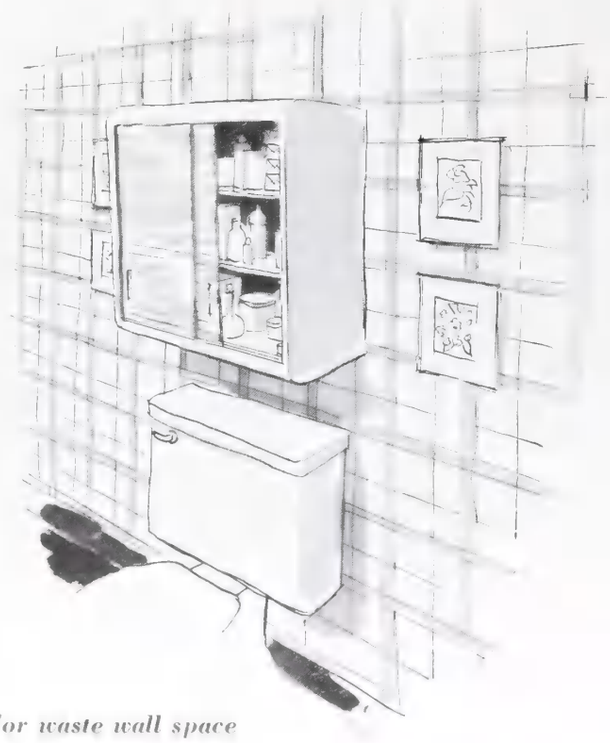
Look with fresh eyes and be amazed how much storage space you find possible in places not now paying their way. Let these practical suggestions start you on this profitable hunting



Are you using your built-ins fully?



Don't waste possible storage space in built-ins. Here you lift foam rubber cushions to discover commodious storage space, with openings big enough to accept sizable things like blankets. Back section is subdivided and shelved for storing small items.

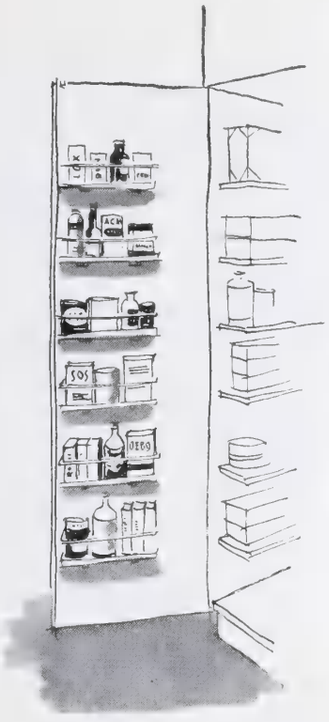
Space for bulk packages

Do you have exposed ceiling joists in the kitchen, garage or basement? You can get storage space between them for bulk items. Here plywood panels 24" wide were nailed across the joists. Add a wire from plywood to ceiling between joists for extra support.



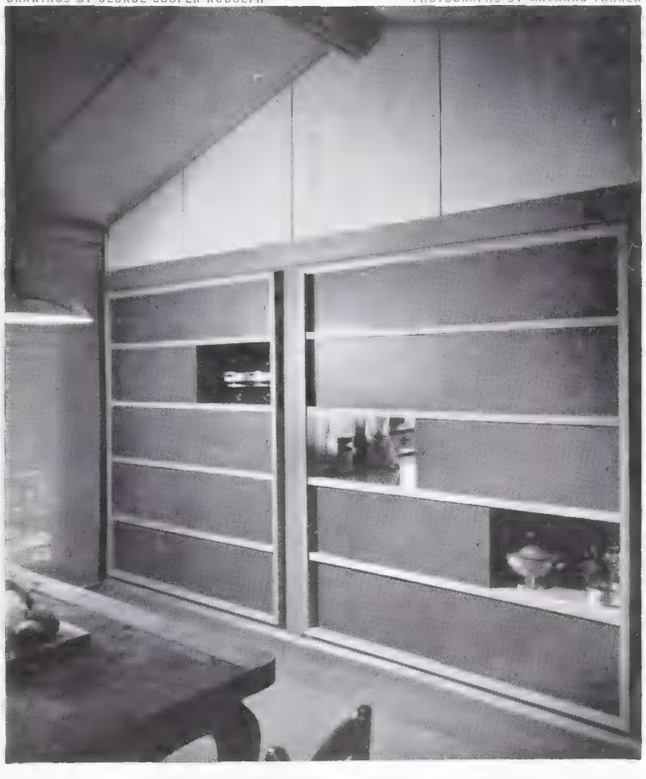
For waste wall space

Every bathroom needs a really deep cabinet to supplement the medicine cabinets. The Kelvinator metal unit (really made for kitchen use) hangs on small metal brackets easily attached to any type of wall. No special tools or skill are needed.

Add a room divider

Many rooms just don't have enough wall surface for sufficient storage pieces to meet your needs. Could you rearrange the furniture so that you can add a room divider for extra drawer and shelf space to get more usefulness from the space? This by Basic-Witz is typical of the many pieces of furniture available.

Shelves for doors



(Left) You can buy or build shelves in a variety of shapes and sizes to attach to backs of doors. There's an array of other hardware in stores under such trade names as "K-Veniences." (See "How to Squeeze the Last Inch Out of Your Storage" on pages 13 and 97.)

Could a whole wall be storage space?

Many items are needed both in dining room and kitchen. Here is a storage wall reached easily from either room merely by opening sliding doors (strips of Masonite). Only extra space needed was 3″ strip for adding doors on dining side. Designed by Harwell Harris for the Clarence Wyles.

Why is this garden worth using as a model?

Because it provides nearly everything experienced homeowners want from their property in this decade:

1. Almost 100% maintenance-free
2. Privacy from the street
3. Liabilities turned into assets
4. Outdoor living space at floor level of house
5. Grades used skillfully to add visual interest
6. Do-it-yourself possibility
7. Ample off-street parking

Many people put off landscaping their homes because they don't know what to do. They know, though, what they don't want—a garden that will involve more upkeep time than they can manage.

Talking with ardent gardeners always discourages such people. The ardent gardener enjoys caring for his garden: He certainly isn't the one to help think up good ways to reduce gardening time.

Instead they should look to what busy but experienced homeowners have discovered. They have learned to have a good garden without much upkeep.

The Dana C. DeHarts are such people.

When they built their present house in 1952, they called in landscape architect Thomas Church for help in designing the garden which was to surround it.

Just as the house was nearing completion, a big wind tipped over the huge old oak in the back yard. It was, seemingly, a catastrophe, for this tree was the chief reason why the DeHarts had chosen this particular building site!

The DeHarts were dismayed and considered selling the house. But landscape architect Church proposed turning the accident into an asset. "Leave the tree on its side," he said, "and build a deck out from the house to feature the low canopy of branches."

The roots did not all pull out of the ground and, by bulkheading, it was possible to cover the exposed roots and keep the tree alive. When Church cleared the brush from the head of the tree, he discovered it arched over the proposed terrace as shown. Metal posts were added to keep it from settling further.

Mr. DeHart has always been a staunch advocate of professional landscape architects. Now he says with more conviction than ever that one is (Continued overleaf)

Master bedroom overlooks this inviting private world and, thanks to the door at left, is convenient to it. It's never enough just to be able to look out on a garden. A big wall of glass, that invites you out doors, must be accompanied by a real exit in order to be satisfactory.

Working a deck (or terrace) skillfully into a changing grade is more than most amateurs can do, but owner Dana DeHart, following plans by landscape architect Thomas Church, did all the carpentry himself, saving considerable money and achieving very creditable results.

Why is this garden worth using as a model? continued foolish to spend anything on a garden before consulting an expert who can see all the possibilities.

But back to the low upkeep requirement the DeHarts insisted upon:

Church proposed planting all bare ground solidly with ivy—a sea of ivy, he called it. This would hold the soil tight even on the fairly steep little banks, adding visual interest to the garden. There would never be any need to clip the ivy.

Since it was intended that the house and terrace seem to float in a sea of ivy, the seat-wall on the deck was built with fragile-looking supports. Growth at the DeHarts is rampant enough so that the leaves are sizable—even the falling oak leaves drift down through the ivy leaves and form an out-of-sight mulch that helps the ivy and eliminates leaf-raking.

The DeHart lot is fairly sizable—86 by 162 feet. The big deck represented a major labor expense. The best bid by a landscape nurseryman was $4,500 for everything.

Mr. DeHart decided to do the work himself. He bought the lumber and plants, became his own carpenter and planter. He saved $3,000. He worked off and on for three months, and thoroughly enjoyed himself.

A large window of the house faces the street which is just 40 feet away. Not only has Mr. Church screened the big window effectively from the street and the bright lights of cars, but he has also provided off-street parking for three cars (above). Photograph at left, above, shows how privacy wall looks from front window. Street is simply not there.

Mass of ivy, which completely surrounds house, flows in handsome curves, making the area seem much larger than it is. The ivy needs no upkeep. Even the oak leaves drift down through it.

Note how ivy gives the front yard a garden look, although there really is a big chunk of it paved for automobile parking. Bold, curving lines of the ivy bed also keep you from noticing that the ground slopes quite sharply from the street toward the front door, also toward side lot line.

PARTIES that make you famous

By VIRGINIA STANTON

When people are in the mood to soak up every last minute of sun on their week ends, it's a shame to bring them inside to feed them. It's also a pity to take jellied soups and aspics out into the glare of the noonday sun. They can't stand it, and you'll only undo your own work and spoil your menu.

Here's a way to give a Sunday luncheon party that works all ways, no matter how you slice it. It's ideal for 16, but it works with ease for 26, for I just did it last Sunday. (I arranged two tables for eight and another for ten and it was just right for conversation.)

The first essential for a party in the glaring, noonday sun is this: Avoid white or light-colored linens, plates, table tops, anything. They glare up into the eyes and are most uncomfortable. Sparkling things are also hard on the eyes. Glass-top tables, if they are frosted glass, are easy to take, but not smooth glass. Except for that, anything goes.

Second essential: Have a collection of big, gay, broad-brimmed hats so that the delicate ones, or those who are not dressed for it, can retreat under the shade of a hat and still be with the party. I've been collecting them for years from all parts of the world—tea-planters' hats, pith helmets, cocoanut hats from Hawaii, Caribbean straws. I "duke them up" with any mad thing that occurs to me—not too mad, mind you, or conservative people would be too shy to wear them. There is a great pile of all sizes and types, everyone different, waiting on the terrace when the guests arrive. They appear to be sun shades, but (Please turn to page 102)

This table is a model of how-to-set-a-table-in-the-full-sun. There are no shiny or white surfaces to glare or reflect into the eyes. The china and the travertine table top have ideal color and texture for nonreflectivity. Waviness in surface of the glasses makes them agreeable to hold, as well as non-glare. Avoid using white or sparkling objects on table settings in full sun.

Color changes within a variety are subtle but sufficient to allow you to play them skillfully. Changes between varieties are bigger, but avoid drastic changes: Ideal use is a gradual shift much as all earth colors of a region blend.

Always look searchingly at each plant before deciding how it should be used in the garden. Do its inherent characteristics call for use in masses or for a solitary starring position? Should lines be formal—or as casual as waves?

How to use plants with Style—IV

By DR. JOSEPH E. HOWLAND House Beautiful's Garden Editor

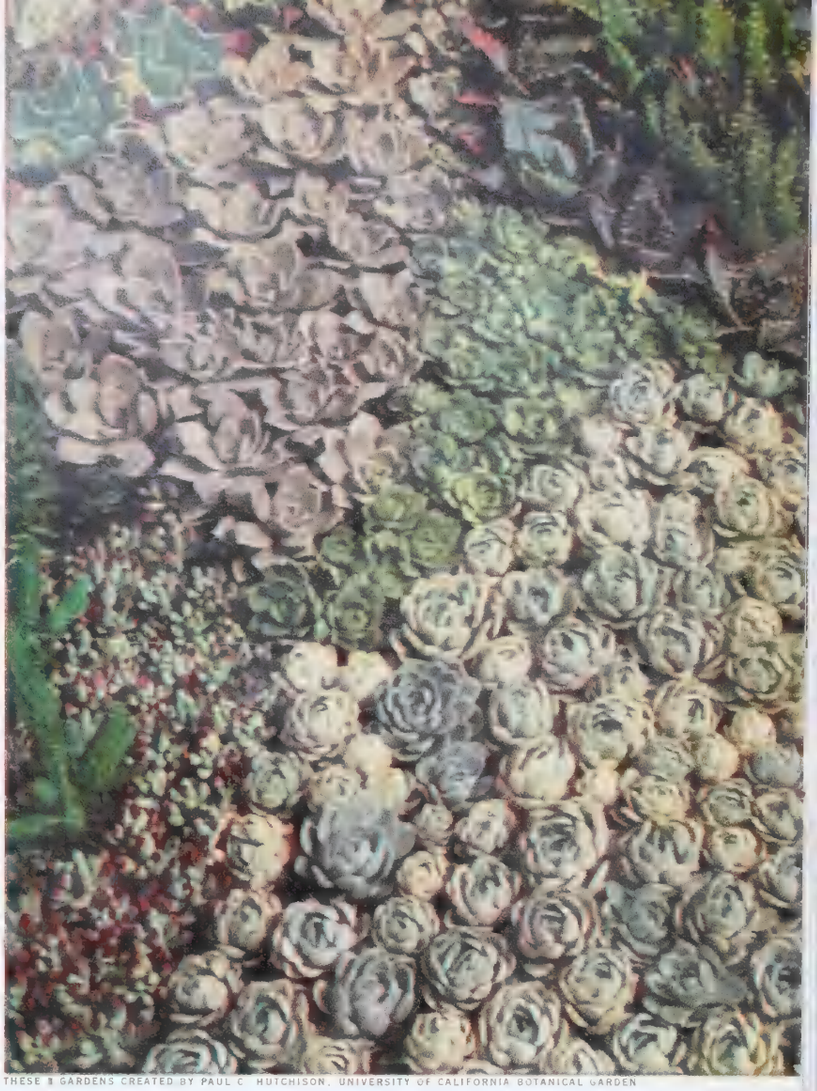
Why are some gardens messy, formless and dowdy, while others have style and character?



It has nothing to do with the amount of time or money spent. Instead it comes from using plants in ways that bring out their form, texture and growing habits.

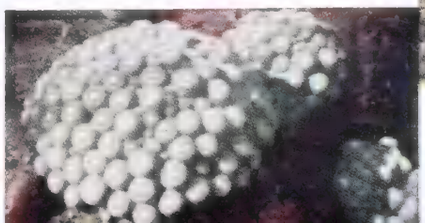
"Sure!" you say. "That's obvious!"

But is it? It can't be, or there would be more stylish gardens. So what is it people miss seeing when they look at plants?

Perhaps they don't see how that plant will be best presented. When the jeweler shows you a diamond, he puts it on a black velvet cushion—not a white piece of paper. He knows black velvet brings out the best in a diamond. He knows a cushion makes it look more precious. He puts a strong down-light shining on the (Please turn to page 116)

THESE 2 GARDENS CREATED BY PAUL C. HUTCHISON, UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA BOTANICAL GARDEN

To be stylish a garden must use plants so their forms are well and appropriately displayed and placed so they thrive. Succulents thrive in sunny, dry places and crowd beautifully to form a handsome "living mosaic."



Beauty of form in many plants comes from the pattern of branches or twigs, which are therefore best enjoyed when silhouetted against sky or green lawn. But succulents have cup-like forms, look best when seen from above. Hence they appear most beautiful—therefore most stylish—when massed in low beds.

Every plant is unique in some way. You must discover this uniqueness if you are to be able to use the plant with the sureness that leads to a stylish result. This calls for seeing each plant for what it is—and isn't. Really look at the plant: Divorce this looking from all previous knowledge. Then decide: Should it be used alone, massed, or with other plants?

Geraniums have come back

By JEAN LAWSON

We've been selling geraniums short for years. Conditioned by the stunted specimens of fire escapes, flower boxes and cemeteries, and haunted by the heavy-handed use in pre-Victorian days, we've failed until recently to see just how exciting geraniums can be.

Unwittingly, we dismissed a large group of excellent plants because we didn't know how to grow them. Ever since the great geranium furor in the early 1800's the advice has been: To make geraniums bloom, keep them pot-bound in heavy soil and go easy on food and water. Poor soil, drought, starvation. No wonder the plants were leggy and unattractive! No wonder they seemed out of place in our demanding modern gardens which place so much value on good plant form. True, given a light, warm location geraniums did flower a bit in spite of the other adversities, but only hobbyists, sentimentalists, or the unknowing have bothered much with geraniums in recent years.

That's how it was. Now we know geraniums for what they really are: exuberant, irrepressible plants, as versatile as they are various, some with spectacular flowers, others with delightful, surprising scents and fascinating leaf textures, and all with infinite appeal and a multiplicity of uses.

When properly grown (we'll tell you how later), the inherent geranium vitality pours itself into attractive, bushy, low-branched plants which flower constantly. Performance is guaranteed: children and pets offer little hazard. And if, by chance, water restrictions keep you from supplying all the moisture you'd like during a drought, geraniums will hold their own, then begin active growth again when the crisis is over.

Geraniums have become a respectable part of the landscape in a manner far different from their first great reign in popularity. We use geraniums with style. Not for us the multi-colored beds of (Please turn to page 119)

ARE GOURMETS BORN OR MADE?

The DAILY ARTS OF GOOD LIVING

THE MODERN EPICURE

By POPPY CANNON

What is your Taste I.Q.? Here is a simple, amusing, yet scientific way to rate the sensitivity of your palate. Even if your score is low, there are things you can do about it. This article is the first in a series interpreting the results of several years of research and experimentation sponsored by HOUSE BEAUTIFUL and conducted by Commander Lendal H. Kotschevar, Ph.D., former Director of the Navy Commissary Research Division and presently Director of Housing and Home Economics at Montana State University.

The Test for Tasters described below is a home-style adaptation of a method devised by Commander Kotschevar to select the best possible panel of judges for his researches. You will find it as much fun as any parlor game. Results will be revealing—may be surprising. They could have considerable effect upon the quality of your daily life by encouraging you and your family to taste—really taste—your food and enjoy good eating.

Taking the Taster's Test at House Beautiful.

How do you judge a judge of fine food? Does nature endow you with the gifts that make a gourmet? Can you do anything about developing an appreciation of flavor? Are men or women the best tasters? Does smoking affect the sense of taste? How about cocktails? Does your palate's sensitivity vary as you grow older? Does it change from day to day? From hour to hour?

Science, through a series of simple tests, is now prepared to offer answers to such questions and to many others in that dusky subjective area which has always been so delightful to explore, so difficult to chart.

All our lives we have been brought up to believe that "when it is a question of taste, there is simply no point in arguing."

Who is to say whether whale blubber or Hundred Year Eggs, cannibal steak, camembert or caviar, truffles, chitterlings or home-made ice cream is the best of all possible eating? Who is to say whether plump, white or the thinnest of green asparagus is most delightful, whether green beans are worth eating only when they are French style—lightly cooked, haricots verts or our own Southern style lengthily impregnated with salt pork and hot pepper?

So much depends upon who you are, who your grandparents were, where you were raised, what you do for a living, how hard you worked today, the state of your health.

Our gustatory likes and dislikes represent the combination of many subtle influences. In that lovely omnibus word "delicious," we refer not only to a reaction on the tongue but also in the nostrils. More often than we realize we are influenced by the quality of light in the room, the appearance of the dish, the heft of the silver with which it is served, the voice of a companion, not to mention the dramatic gestures of a maître d'hotel or the romantic name of the dish on the menu.

Then there is the question of fragrance. Brillat Savarin in his famed "Physiology of Taste" said, "I am tempted to believe that smell and taste form only one sense . . . when smell is interrupted, then taste is paralyzed."

That gastronomic philosopher appears to have been proved partly wrong by present-day investigators who contend that there are at least four basic tastes not entirely related to fragrance. The identification of these are not affected by previous bouts of hay fever or sinus. They are as primary as primary colors. HOUSE BEAUTIFUL'S living-room version of the Test for Tasters was developed for laboratory use by Commander Kotschevar. It measures your ability to recognize and discriminate between intensities of four primary tastes: salt, sweet, sour and bitter. Only this and nothing more! It does not pretend to be an evaluation of your appreciation of the fine arts of the table. Yet the test can have far-reaching effects on your daily living.

A Test for Tasters

Requirements for the test are very simple: 5 quarts of flavor-free bottled spring water, 16 glasses, 4 small pint-size pitchers or containers, a clean spoon for each tester and a spoon for each container (so the procedure is perfectly sanitary and there is no possibility of mixing flavors.)

Get 5 milligrams of quinine sulphate, ¾ gram of citric acid, 2.2 grams of sodium chloride and 2.5 grams of sucrose. All 4 of these inexpensive chemicals can be obtained from your druggist weighed out in the proper amounts. Also you'll need a marking pencil, score pad, a measuring cup and a set of measuring spoons.

The Test represents an attempt to evaluate the individual's sensitivity to the 4 primary tastes: salt, sweet, sour and bitter in the most dilute solutions which only a highly sensitive palate can detect. The first of these tests, known as the Identification or Check Test, is basic.

Before any test add 1 cup of bottled water to each of 4 pitchers. To first container add the quinine sulphate, to the second add citric acid, to the third add sodium chlorate and to the fourth add sucrose. Stir each until the chemical is dissolved. Now you are ready to start the tests.

Test No. 1—Identification

Set out on a tray 4 glasses marked for identification each one containing 8 ounces (1 measuring cup) of bottled spring water at room temperature. To the first add 1 tablespoon of the quinine sulphate solution; to the second add 1 tablespoon citric acid solution; to the third add a tablespoon of sodium chloride solution, and to the fourth 1 tablespoon of sucrose solution. Stir each solution which you have just made with its own silver spoon or glass stirrers. Be sure to identify each glass as you add the solution for you cannot trust to your memory and you may not be able to trust your taste.

The quantity of each ingredient required to make solutions which are just past the threshold for recognition by highly sensitive palates were determined in the laboratory after many months of constant experimentation. Our livingroom version uses solutions slightly stronger to allow for the inaccuracies of home-as against laboratory-techniques. But even here these solutions are so weak that the test remains challenging. Almost everyone feels at first he is just tasting pure water, but it it not long before certain flashes of taste emerge. Each person is asked to identify in writing the taste of each of the 4 solutions, Sour? Salt? Sweet? Bitter?

In the laboratory only those who passed this first test were allowed to take the second part. Out of 106 candidates, 26 passed —roughly 1 out of 4.

How does this compare with your group?

Test No. 2—Discrimination

This tests your ability to carry food flavors in your memory long enough to compare other flavors with it—the mark of a true epicure. The test is divided into 3 parts: Arrange 3 more trays with 4 glasses on each, each glass with a code letter or number.

Part 1—SOUR TEST

Leave one of the 4 glasses unflavored. Add to the second 1

What makes an Award-Winning House?

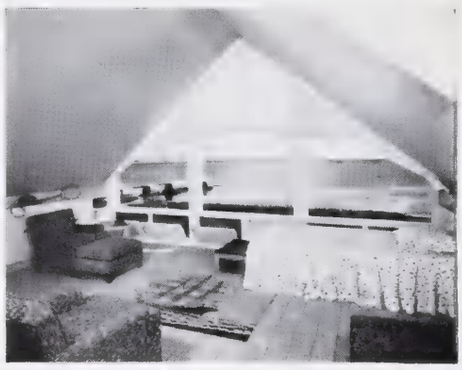
Here is why this house received the 1954 Boston Art Festival Award as the best of the architectural projects submitted in a competition covering the New England States

Its name is Mid-Century American. Its region is New England. The name doesn't count, but the region does. For this house has been judged by the Boston Art Festival of 1954 as having best brought the grace of New England tradition to full and useful life in terms of the mid-20th century.

It symbolizes the end of the too-long battle between so-called conventional and so-called modern architecture by recognizing that emotional needs are deeply rooted in the past while living needs are immediately of the present. Only a good house, one which cheerfully shrugs off the label of "conventional" or the tag of "modern," it seems to say, can hope to satisfy all human needs—functional, emotional and esthetic.

WHAT THE JURY SAYS

For anyone knowing the composition of the jury, the selection of the J. Gordon Gibbs house, designed by Boston architect George W. W. Brewster, from among those submitted, was a startling, if welcome, surprise. The jurors were: José Luis Sert, Dean of the Faculty of Design, Harvard University; George Howe, Professor of Architecture, Yale University; and Burnham Kelly, Associate Professor of City Planning, Massachusetts Institute of Technology.



At least the first two jurors are generally considered advocates of an extreme form of modern architecture. For them, then, to have chosen the Gibbs house as one of the best entries is indeed a surprise and perhaps indicates that a new age of reason is dawning for everybody interested in the housing of man, a new appreciation of living, regional architecture.

Mr. Sert, chairman of the jury, told HOUSE BEAUTIFUL that all three members had worked together in agreement. They had found the Gibbs house a "good example of straightforward modern architecture with dignity and beautiful proportions. It avoided all the tricky clichés of many modern houses which, aiming at the sensational, never benefit the people who live in them. It adapted the good elements of traditional New England architecture to modern use and needs."

"Domestic architecture should be restful," Mr. Sert said. "A residence should have a quality of serenity and calm for people to return home to. The Gibbs house has these elements, and although it is large and expensive, the jury felt that its principles could be applied to more modest structures. Its merits are: good proportions, simplicity, unpretentiousness and balance. It is fitted to its climate and its particular landscape."

It is delicate and small-scaled like the New England landscape. It rests lightly and naturally on its site.

Here is a house that is neither conventional nor modern, but simply a good house which satisfies both the emotional needs which are rooted in historical custom and the practical needs of today's way of life. It belongs to New England as much as the Cape Cod cottage, but goes far beyond the latter in its adaptation of traditional forms to contemporary requirements and in its use of modern materials and techniques. It is a fine example of living regional architecture

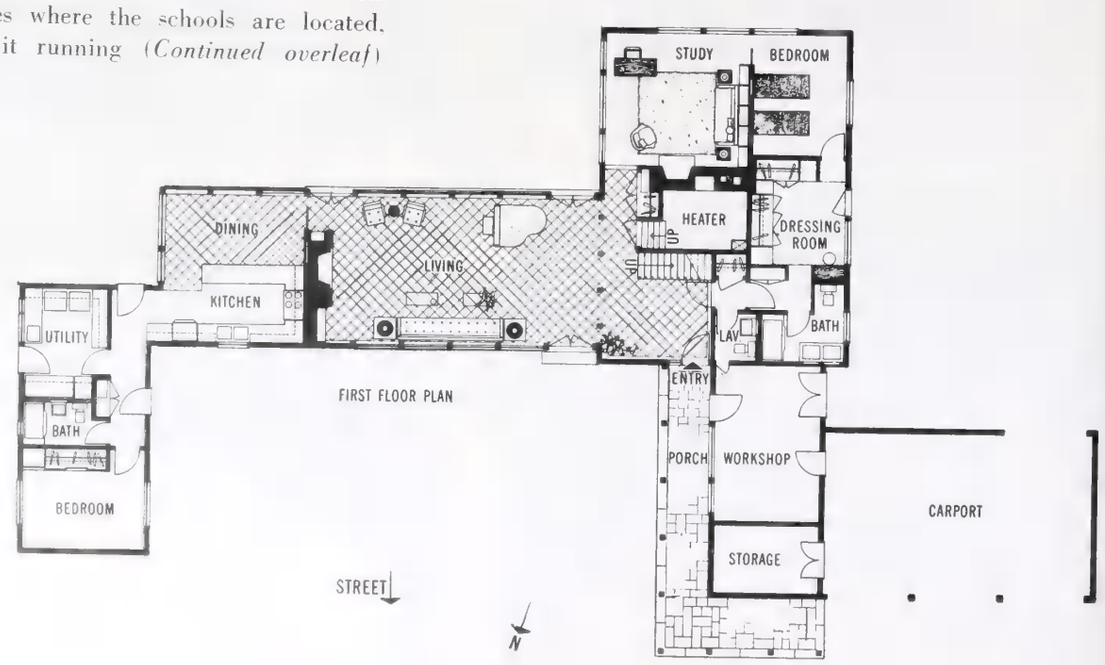
Another juror spoke of the Gibbs house as simple, relaxed, indigenous and inviting. It is not fussy, he said, complex or startling. It doesn't try to prove how intellectual it is. We have now come to the point in architecture where we don't have to be tricky in order to show our modernness. The Gibbs house has permanent merit: it returns to the eternal verities of domestic architecture. Its relation to the ground is natural and easy. It lies down on the cape. It fits its bay site. It belongs to the boats that sail by.

WHAT THE ARCHITECT SAYS

Here is the statement of the award-winning architect. George Brewster, on the house which was chosen as the best of the architectural projects submitted in the all-New England competition.

This house takes its form from three main influences—the site and the climate, the needs and preferences of the clients and the architect's desire to project an aspect of beauty.

The site is a low terrace by the sea in Marion, Massachusetts. There is a long view down Buzzards Bay directly to the south and a more immediate view of the busy entrance to Marion Harbor to the east. Formerly a large brick house occupied the easterly side of the land looking out on an old garden in which five copper beeches in two rows remained. Around these trees the house was planned and placed.



In this part of the world, a house facing south offers in addition to privacy and a view, the added delights of sun, summer breezes and protection from northerly winter winds.

The client's family consists of man and wife and two daughters in their teens. This house was to shelter them, to be contemporary, economically maintained and able to be run well without servants. The kitchen-dining space, the guest or servant's room, the shop and the master bedroom-dressing room combination were all developments of their requirements. Mr. and Mrs. Gibbs are the president and vice-president of the Katharine Gibbs Schools and they wished in winter, when the children were away, to be able to come back from their work at the different cities where the schools are located, to their house and find it running (Continued overleaf)

The owners wanted all the elegance and grace of traditional architecture but none of its problems of maintenance and small, chopped-up rooms. Since Mrs. Gibbs does her own cooking, she particularly welcomed a kitchen open to the view and permitting her fully to enjoy her family or her guests while preparing meals. She also wanted ease of serving and clearing dishes in keeping with her general philosophy of simplifying housekeeping by efficient architectural planning.

and easily operated. They wanted to live year round as they did in summer—informally, easily going in and out, able to come from their boat moored off the end of their pier to interiors and floors that were natural and informal.

To the architect, the site and the clients' desires called for an expression of security and commitment. The coastline is low and sandy, without particular identity from rocks or trees. The new house needed to establish character and permanence, and to be small scale and unpretentious.

The first choice was a beautiful roof, then fireplaces and stone floors, and an open plan with free spaces but contained in some adequately ordered arrangement, not formal but solid and determined. Also influential in the appearance of the house were these factors: extreme exposure to the weather, the remote possibility of hurricane high tide and a high ground water level which made a cellar undesirable.

Entering study from living room.

WHAT THE OWNERS SAY

Mr. and Mrs. Gibbs are native New Englanders who wanted a new house that would settle gracefully into New England community life and be at peace with neighboring houses. At the same time they wanted no part of the problems they had had in their former three-story, 14-room house. No more sleep-in servants, chopped-up, gloomy rooms or Victorian stuffiness for them. "We didn't want to throw out tradition," they said, "but we wanted to live more freely." And now they do.

They confirmed everything their (Please turn to page 115)

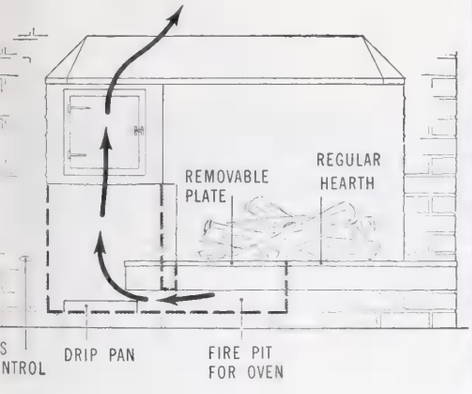
Better ways to cook meat

Here's the real story on how to get the last drop of goodness out of your meat, whether you cook it indoors or out

By ELIZABETH GORDON
Editor



Knock on any door in America these days and you find a meat-cooking expert. Put several of these experts together around the same charcoal fire and you have an argument.

For the "experts" don't agree. And when experts don't agree, it's in order to examine everything from scratch—to separate the legends from the facts, the truths from the the fads and fancies.

In 1946 we at HOUSE BEAUTIFUL decided to try to unscramble the notions about what is loosely called "barbecuing." We went to professional experts like Trader Vic, whose gourmet meat cooking is known around the world. We tried to learn from everybody. As we learned we began to enlist technically inquisitive minds to probe along with us—people who found it fun to sift and sift, looking for the One Law (or maybe it was going to be Several Laws) while they broiled their Saturday-night steak.

We knew from the beginning what everyone knows: that cooking meat with charcoal or wood in free open air

Smoke oven (modeled after Chinese) was integrated into design of fireplace. Dr. Brown can now smoke-cook with wood in low firebox (see above) or he can cook with gas in smoking stack, getting smoke taste from smoldering sawdust. His favorite "prescriptions" for smoke cooking are on page 118, together with explanatory drawings by architect Clarence Tantau, Jr., designer.

(instead of in a closed oven) always produced better-tasting meat. But we found from eating around that some people got noticeably better results because they did a lot of little things differently. But which little things were the ones that made the big difference?

Three years ago we were so deep in it that several of us could hardly get our cars into our garages for the multitude of portable meat cookers that were being tested. And there have been hardly enough days in the week to cook all the variations we wanted to try. Meat cooking dominates our conversations, until someone forcibly changes them to another subject. (Recently, at the home of General Harold Bartron, one of the most expert of the experts, five HOUSE BEAUTIFUL editors talked meat cooking continuously for five solid hours, stopping only to eat great roast turkey and even greater roast beef.)

What have we learned after eight years of listening to everybody and of trying everything?

Is it worth all the fuss people are making about it?

Is it worth your becoming a real expert yourself?

Yes, we think that the general type of cooking loosely called "barbecuing" has great advantages over stove-cooking of meat. But meat can be ruined just as easily as not by people who don't understand what they are doing. So the goal of this article is to state the basic truths to the best of our knowledge and ability.

First off, you can't be an expert if you use that word "barbecue." It has come to mean almost anything: a highly flavored sauce, any act of cooking outdoors by any method, a political rally with free food, a spicy meat sandwich duked up with tomato sauce sold by drive-in restaurants, etc. The term has become so loose and broad it does not mean anything any more to anyone.

Our talk—and thinking—needs to be more specific. In fact, there are six methods of meat cookery, none of which involves the kitchen stove and five of which can be done indoors. (So you can't even use the term "outdoor cooking," because people like it so much they are beginning to do it indoors, winter and summer.) These six are:

1. Broiling above a live fire
2. Rotating on a revolving spit above a live fire
3. Rotating on a revolving spit in front of a vertical live fire
4. Rotating under an electric element in an open-sided rotisserie
5. Smoke-cooking high above a 300° wood fire
6. Smoke-curing with a very low temperature wood fire

They are basically quite different from each other—some differing more than others. The commonest method (broiling above a live fire) is the hardest to do successfully, for it

BROILING over a live fire takes the most skill and know-how: controlling the fire, preventing flaming of fat and greasy smoke. Keep a water squirter near, cut off all excess fat beforehand. Best method for steak and hamburger takes skill to keep the fire under control so the meat does not catch fire and so the fat dripping into the fire does not burn and flavor the meat with an acrid taste.

The easiest and absolutely foolproof method (rotating on a revolving spit in front of a live fire) is not well known and so is little used though widely used in Europe.

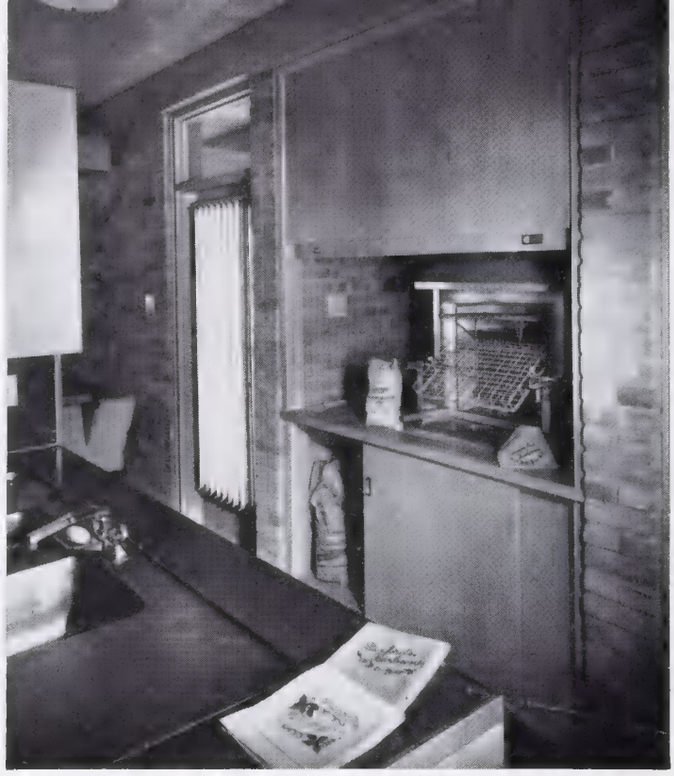
The most exciting taste of them all is smoke cooking (or hot smoking). (See HOUSE BEAUTIFUL for August, 1953). It has spread like wildfire the last year—and as a result the term "smoke flavored" is being bandied about by a lot of manufacturers whose products do not deliver a proper smoked result. (More about this later.)

To be adequately set up to get the best out of your meat, we recommend that you be able to cook by at least two of these methods, though three are better. These two should be: broiling over a live fire and rotating in front of a live fire. But if you could add smoke cooking to your repertoire, you can have every taste variation of real importance.

If you live in an apartment and have a fireplace, you can still use two of the methods. You can broil over a live fire in some of the new fireplace units, two of which are shown here. But absolutely essential is this: You must really know how to light a charcoal fire without paper and kindling, and you have to be able to restrain yourself from putting the meat on till the fire is really low. Otherwise you get too much spatter and smoke.

No matter where you live you can use an electric rotisserie. It is odorless and smokeless, and does a very good job of producing juicy, evenly cooked fowl, roasts and novelty cuts. When judging a rotisserie, whether it be electric or charcoal fired, check how many types of accessories come with it. The more the better. You want as many as possible, for they let you cook fish, shrimp, lobster, shish kabob.

Rotating on a spit under or in front of a vertical fire is good because fat drips into a pan, not into the fire. This lets basting, herb butters and marinades come into the picture, and opens up to you a whole world of recipes that are simply not possible when the bastings drip into the fire and burn up. It lets you cook other foods at the same time, and they become flavored, via basting, with the meat juices, the herbs, the marinades or whatever you are using.



A person adept at cooking over a fire can, with a spit, almost do what has been described just above. We learned this from General Bartron, who sets a shallow drip pan in the middle of his live but burned-low briquettes. Thus he keeps the fat from burning or catching fire (which improves the taste) and he achieves the mellow, pure taste results of a vertical fire rotisserie.

Rotating meat or fowl on an electric spit in front of (or under) a fire produces best results, for fat then does not burn up or catch fire. Turning keeps meat coated with bastings that glaze and seal, so keeps meat juicier

We've talked a lot about skill and know-how, especially the skill required to broil over a fire. Just what do they add up to? Here are our axioms for getting the best out of whatever you are cooking:

1. Never let the meat or the fat drippings catch on fire. Flame means trouble. Fat dripping into the fire and flaming up puts a carbon taste on the meat. If the meat itself chars, you get what gourmets consider an equally "bad" taste. (We say this despite the popularity of charred and blackened meat at many steak houses. Once people get acquainted with properly broiled meat, they are never or rarely again content with burned meat.)

The cures for this problem: Cut away excess fat beforehand. Let the fire be well burned down past the flaming stage. Have a quick way to squirt water on any flames which flare up, or use a method of cooking where the fire is not under the meat, so fat drippings cannot get to the fire. (This is why the vertical fire rotisserie has so many advantages.)

2. Never cover a live fire with a lid (even though it is vented), or even part of a lid. It impairs the combustion; a greasy smoke is produced and a varnish-like taste, resembling paint, coats the meat. Because of the sudden upsurge of interest in smoke cookery, a lot of people think this is the way to get a smoke taste. But there is good and bad smoke. Greasy smoke is bad smoke—and is the product of fat dripping into the fire, combined with lack of oxygen, poor draft and poor combustion. Good smoke can only be produced when the meat is not directly above the fire, so it cannot drip into it. Best smoke-cooks arrange to hang meat 30″ to 40″ up in a flue or chimney with the wood fire not directly beneath, permitting a drip pan to catch fat.

You can damp a lively fire with sawdust, green leaves or wood and get good-tasting smoke. But don't damp it with metal. (The aviation-engine people know all about the "varnish" that is formed by oil on very hot metal.) And don't confuse a charred, burnt taste with a smoke taste. They are worlds apart, but the confusion exists because most people have not yet tasted true smoke-flavor.

3. Rotating meat on a spit improves it in every way. (Steak is the only exception.) There are several technical reasons why turning the meat as it cooks produces a better result. (Two reading references, if you want (Turn to page 119)

The Robert Stantons built their smoke oven from Trader Vic's plans. Took 700 fire bricks, 3 days of labor by a mason, $50 of iron work. They use it twice a week.

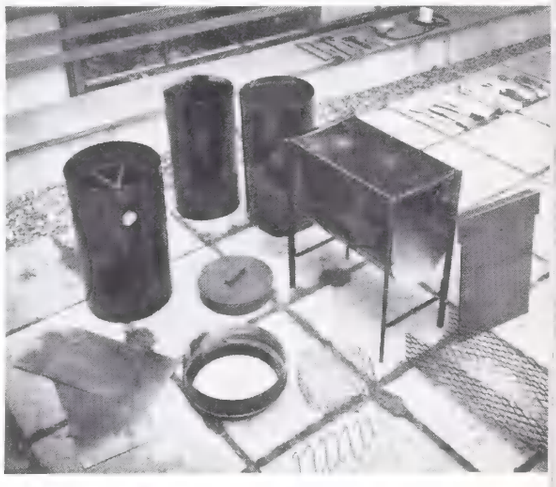
There is good and bad smoke. You get the good-flavored smoke by putting the meat in a chimney or flue, through which the heat and smoke pass, but not directly over the fire. No fat must drip into fire or you get bad smoke

Photographer makes own smoke oven for $18

By Ezra Stoller



It took me a half-day's work, a thimblefull of ingenuity, $18 and some junk. But I have a smoker, and anyone who has eaten hot-smoked squab or pork tenderloins knows what that means.

$15 bought: two lengths 12″ stovepipe, one 12″ stovepipe tee, one reducer 14″ to 12″, one 12″ plug and two sheets 24″ x 36″ galvanized sheet metal. From the iron works $3 bought: 20 feet of ¾″ angle iron for frame and reinforcing, two ¾″ x ⅛″ metal straps for leg braces and one piece of expanded metal for grate, 32″ x 20″. The rest was junk lying around my place: 4 feet of aluminum angle, 3 or 4 feet ⅛″ steel rod and a piece of turkey wire to make the basket for smoking hors d'oeuvres.

The whole smoker (you can see it at the right) is held together by a handful of ⅛″ machine screws, nuts and washers. The thermometer in the smoke chamber is a standard oven thermometer which I bought at the hardware store for 40 cents. The component parts are spread out in the photo, far right. In the background of the same photo are the tools that put my smoker together: they include hacksaw, center punch, screw driver, tinsmith shears, pliers, file, electric drill and Band-aids.

I hang the food in the smoke chamber, the opening of which is adjustable by means of the two pieces of loose sheet metal. The plug at the bottom catches the grease and lets it congeal, thus keeping it away from the fire. The grate slides in and out of the fire chamber enabling me to cut out the heat entirely. The damper slides up and down and helps control the heat.

The flavor and quality of smoked food simply can't be matched by your oven. It's so good, it can't even be described. And although you're no cook, you say, a smoker will make you into one as easy as striking a dry match to a piece of paper.

Amateur into professional. This homemade smoke-cooker converted a man who couldn't boil water into a professional-like gourmet chef, to his own and everyone's delighted awe.

HOUSE BEAUTIFUL'S CLIMATE CONTROL PROJECT

WHAT MAKES YOU feel HOT?

If you don't know about the 3 things which make you hot, you can't cope with them. House Beautiful has asked some pertinent questions about summer discomfort of our air conditioning expert. Read his answers below and learn how to keep cool this summer.

1. How much does the thermometer have to do with summer "heat"?

By itself, very little. On a humid, muggy night, you can get just as hot with the thermometer reading 79° as on a dry day when it says 91°, all in the same climate zone. And with enough breeze, you might find either combination of temperature and humidity perfectly comfortable. High temperature is just one of the factors which make you uncomfortable in summer; the other two are high humidity and lack of air circulation.

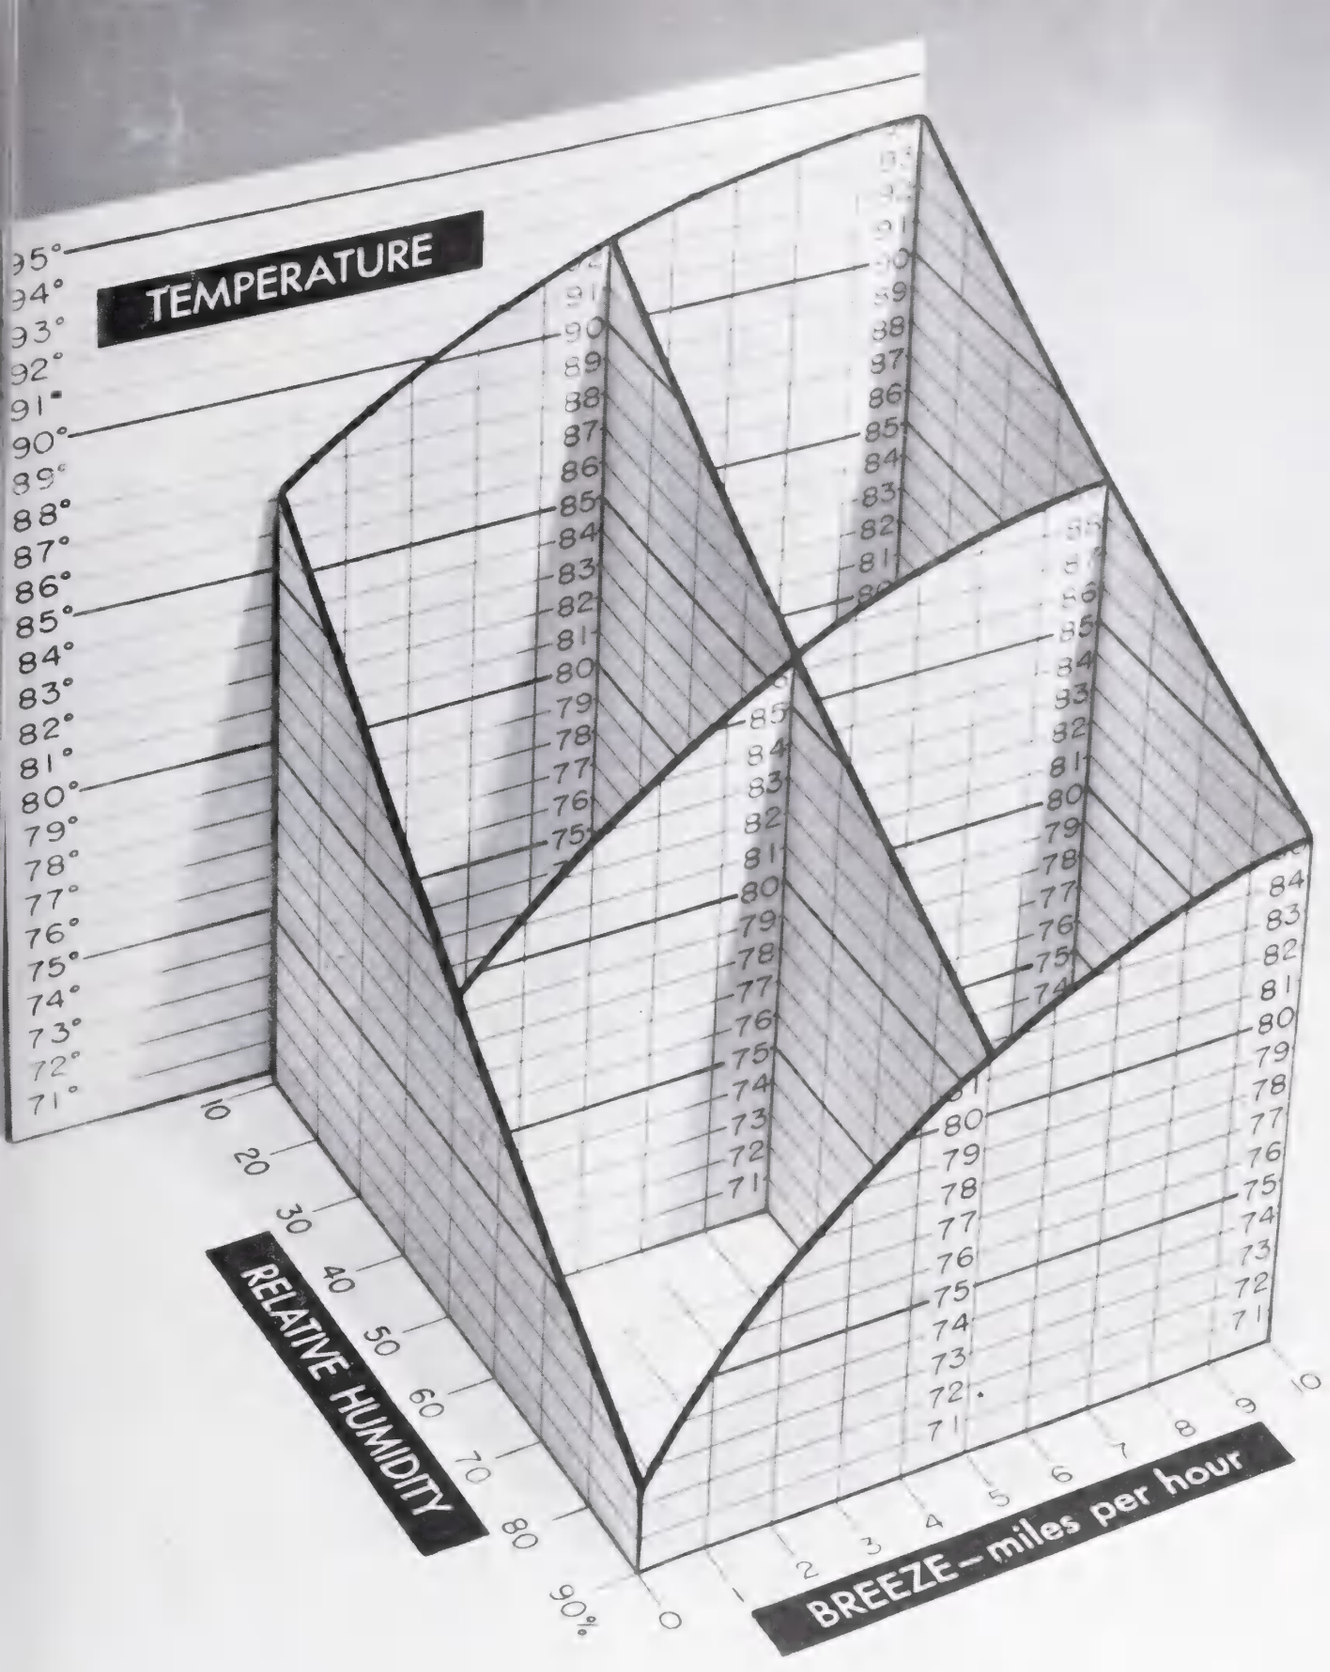
2. How much difference does the wind make?

A really surprising difference. Under average conditions (with the air neither very moist nor very dry) a five-mile-an-hour breeze does as much for you, comfortwise, as a 7° drop in the temperature. Moving air carries away heat and moisture as a bucket-brigade carries water to a fire; even warm air will cool you off until it becomes warmer than your skin (about 91°), and at higher temperatures if it is dry. Moving through the air has the same effect, which is why a spin in the family car can be so refreshing on a hot night, and why you can play tennis in hot weather.

3. How much difference does the humidity make?

A great deal. The way we keep from burning up, when the temperature soars, is by evaporating moisture from our skin. If the humidity is high, and the air around us doesn't want to accept the moisture, it turns into drippy, sticky perspiration. If the humidity is low, and the air is hungry for water, it evaporates and cools us off without our even knowing what is happening. A 40% rise in the relative humidity, such as may occur betwe noon and nightfall of a single day can make y hotter than a 10° rise in temperature.

4. If I can't do much to beat the heat, where's the place to begin?



Begin with air circulation. If your house has been planned to take advantage of summer breeze manufacture a breeze with a fan or fans. Best all, of course, is a big attic fan to draw air into from the outside. With this kind of installation y can have a breeze wherever you want it and contr its intensity to suit the temperature by opening a closing your windows. Large circulating fans whi stand on the floor also do an amazingly good cooli job. Air movement, however induced, is an esp cially good way to cope with the high humidi problem.

5. What can I accomplish by dehumidifying By evaporative cooling?

People who have been using the new dehumidifie to combat basement moisture are finding the cellars a good place to escape the heat. This is on partly due to dehumidification. Any cellar wi heavy walls and a floor in contact with the ear remains cool because these surfaces warm ve slowly; this is why they condense moisture a cause mildew. But a cellar that is both cooler a dryer than the rest of the house—as one with dehumidifier is likely to be—makes a fine ho weather retreat, and the dehumidifier, by preventi damage to furniture, makes it practicable to use i Conversely, those who live in the arid Southwe have long made good use of evaporative coolers add moisture to the air and thus cool it. The seem ing paradox whereby some of us are able to remai comfortable by extracting moisture from the air an others by adding it is explained by differences i climate: In an extremely dry climate we have "dr ness to spare," so to speak, and can afford to expen part of it in cooling the air, thus relieving our bodi of some of the stress of evaporating large quantiti of moisture. Where the air is moist, on the oth hand, we accomplish the same thing by dryin it so that it is easier for the body to lose heat b evaporation.

Two things beside temperature affect how hot you feel —relative humidity and air movement (breeze). If you can dry the air or stir up a breeze, you can do a great deal to reduce your discomfort, even though the air temperature remains unchanged.

House Beautiful's 3-dimensional "Comfortgram" was constructed to show this visually. The uppper black edges of the graphs indicate different air temperatures which "feel" exactly alike to you because of changes in the relative humidity and breeze conditions.

This line starts at 72½° F., the highest air temperature at which most people feel comfortable when the relative humidity is at 90% and there is no breeze.

If the relative humidity drops to 50%, the thermometer can climb to 79° before you begin to feel any hotter than you were at 72½°.

If there is a 5-mile breeze, the thermometer can climb to 82° before you are uncomfortable. A 10-mile breeze makes 85° comfortable at 90% relative humidity.

Combine a 5-mile breeze and a drop to 50% relative humidity and 86° still is comfortable (or 89° if you have a 10-mile breeze).

To determine the comfort temperature in your area, obtain from the local Weather Bureau the breeze and relative humidity figures. Then read from the "Comfortgram" the air temperature that corresponds. Above this temperature you will feel hot—need fans, dehumidifiers, or air conditioning.

You can enjoy the scores of music festivals being held all over the western world this summer from a front seat in your living room

By JOSEPH A. BARRY

Sibelius never goes to the Sibelius Festival, only 30 miles away. He seats himself comfortably at home and listens to it on the radio. Last month many Americans, generally younger than Sibelius (born the year Lincoln was assassinated), traveled thousands of watery miles just to be in Helsinki for the occasion. But we who stayed home can do just about what Sibelius did—listen to the same, or practically the same, program by playing records on our radio-phonograph.

The Sibelius Festival, as usual, included symphonies, concertos, songs and suites. Those who went heard David Oistrakh play the violin concerto, presumably in the style that has ranked him with the finest of our day. They also heard Sir Thomas Beecham conduct two symphonies. Those who weren't there can hear Oistrakh recordings of concertos by Brahms, Beethoven, Mozart, Khachaturian and others, but so far not by Sibelius. Most of these, alas, are poorly engineered disks. However, recently released is Oistrakh's playing of Franck and Prokofiev sonatas with compatriot Lev Oborin at the piano. Recorded in Paris for Vanguard, this disk is exquisite.

Happily, Heifetz and Stern have each interpreted the Sibelius concerto for home listeners; each with Sir Thomas Beecham as conductor. As for the symphonies, Beecham has recorded the first and last only, but you'll find a broad selection of all seven in a Schwann record catalogue including recordings of the first and second by Stokowski and Ormandy respectively, both favorite conductors at Sibelius Festivals.

The two festivals that most strongly tempt me to leave our living room, primarily because I've heard their superb music on records in our living room, are the Casals Festivals at Prades, France, and the Glyndebourne Festivals in England. Take the Glyndebourne Festival: It's unlikely our generation will ever hear Mozart better performed, and to hear Mozart at all is a gift of the muses. The Victor recording of Don Giovanni by the Glyndebourne Opera, even though prewar, has made this a fact for just about everybody. As for me, if, in heaven, Beethoven or Bach were to (Please turn to page 108)

How to find space to grow your own apples

New tree size. Apple trees used to be big, with the branches above head-height; new dwarfs are only height of a big lilac.

Landscape architect Thomas Church suggests defining the paved terrace with espaliered apples only a foot high, plus a row of the new dwarf apple trees that never get more than 15 feet high. Breezes still get through to terrace, but you also get a considerable degree of privacy at eye level.

View planting. Here's a semicircle of seven dwarf apple trees planted so they make a natural beauty spot to attract your eye. Three big shade trees in background, plus flower border in foreground, help reinforce the view. Mr. Church once designed an especially effective planting where the big trees happened to be on neighbor's near-by hill.

Herb garden. Dwarf apples aren't greedy (their roots don't roam widely), so you can safely plant them in your herb or kitchen garden. Note how trees occur in corner of each little garden in the Church plan (left). He also suggests enclosing whole garden with raspberry or blackberry hedge (trained on wires).

Espaliers. We're so accustomed to the U-shape type that we often overlook other interesting possibilities. You have to buy young apple trees, preferably the new dwarf kinds, and train them yourself, of course, if you want one of these shapes. It's surprisingly simple, though; requires only careful and timely snipping.

Garden fence. Espaliered fruit trees are fine to separate the flower garden from the vegetables. Espaliered trees need help of supporting wires for first three or four years, after that stand on their own. You prune back to main branches each winter; by midsummer the bushy leaf growth fills in the screen so that you can't see through it.

STORAGE

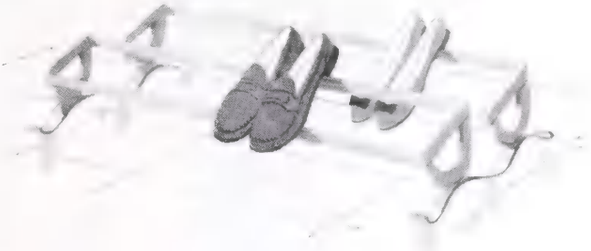
Multiple hangers like this one by Lee-Rowan, accommodate six skirts and six blouses or jackets, saving clothes-rod space and keeping "separates" assembled. Any piece can be removed without disturbing the others.



Hang a Marvel rack from attic or basement joists to create a perch for luggage or storage cases. Several racks can be hooked together and can be supplemented with a clothes rod to create hanging facilities for garment bags you wish to store away.

Clothing carriers are invaluable storage assets even where space-saving isn't a factor. Compare the convenience of full-view selection with the ordeal of groping for a wanted garment. Also, the smallest closet is easily kept tidy.

Make use of closet-door area with fixtures such as K-V Hol-Mor Rack. It's suited to either tie or belt storage. The swivel-action arms make for convenient selection and compact storage arrangement.

A staggered shoe rack such as this K-V type affords easy accessibility along with design that permits it to be hung or simply placed on closet floor. For shoe storage in sliding-door closets, there's a special rack by Berkley.

tablespoon of citric acid solution from the container: to the third add 1 tablespoon plus 1½ teaspoons of the solution and to the fourth add 2 tablespoons of the solution. Label the glasses so that you can identify them and then mix them up. The persons taking the test are told that the solutions vary from no sourness to slightly sour, sourer, sourest. They are asked to rank the glasses in their correct order, noting their decisions.

Part 2—SALT TEST

Leave 1 glass clear. Add to the next glass 1 tablespoon of the original sodium chloride solution from the container: to the next add 2 tablespoons: and to the next 3 tablespoons. Mix the glasses up after labeling and again the glasses should be rated from weakest to strongest.

Part 3—SWEET TEST

Use 4 glasses again. Leave 1 plain. Add to the second 1 tablespoon of the original sucrose solution from the container: to the third add 2 tablespoons; to the fourth, 3 tablespoons. Label glasses and mix. Glasses are again rated from least to most sweet. (Bitter solutions were not used in the Test because they wearied the taste buds too quickly.)

Note: The simplest way to take the Test without asking everyone to drink from a common glass is to dip the solutions out of the glass with clean spoons and taste from the teaspoons. Lick the spoon between each sip.

How to Score the Taster's Test

The first or Identification Test is so important that those who pass it get 100 (25 for each correct answer). In the Second Test give 5 points for each of the other 12 choices correctly made. Add the 2 scores. A perfect score would be 160. If you get it you're wonderful! Anything over 130 is exceptional; 100 or over very good indeed. Less than 75—don't be discouraged. Maybe you need practice in tasting. Or this could be one of your off days. For hints on how to develop and exercise your potentialities for tasting, see below.

ARE GOURMETS BORN OR MADE?

After she had taken the HOUSE BEAUTIFUL Test for Tasters (page 77), one woman said, "To me it was a revelation. For the first time in my life I had the experience of concentrating all my attention on a single mouthful. I gathered all my faculties together. Do you know, I enjoyed it! That little flash of sweetness that came through to me! And afterward I found myself wanting to taste food in the same concentrated way. I started analyzing, really thinking about taste."

Despite a very real interest in food, this woman did not make a high score the first time she took the test. But with practice she improved amazingly.

Certainly there are some people who are taste dullards, just as there are those who are tone deaf. But it would appear that these are few. Most of us can train our palates. If you like to eat, chances are you'll make a pretty good taster. Emotional elements have an important bearing. A person who has too many food aversions, who is picky and finicky at the table, may consider himself "the sensitive type." Generally he is less of a connoisseur than the hearty lip-smacker who enjoys almost everything.

Evidently the first requisite is interest. The second is concentration. The third is self-confidence, the ability to recognize that flash of flavor which comes within a second or two after the food is taken into the mouth. You must have faith in your perception. If you shilly-shally and change your mind, you're lost.

The fourth requirement for the development of a connoisseur is practice and more practice.

Experience as well as interest may count for more than sensitive taste buds. Perhaps this explains why Commander Kotschevar discovered his best judges among the older group, although some psychologists suggest that the sense of taste is most vivid among people in their twenties. His findings are in line with the observations of ancient philosophers who believed that the joys of the palate become more intense and more appealing as we reach middle life.

When is a Gourmet not a Gourmet?

After three and a half years of research Commander Kotschevar is pretty well convinced that there is no appreciable difference in the tasting abilities of men and women. The best cooks are not necessarily the best tasters. And all of us, even the best of us, have our off moments.

Surroundings have a great deal to do with the ability to taste. Scores were generally highest when

e tests were given in special oms, "quiet, free of odors, air nditioned, well lighted, painted th eye-appealing colors and uipped with comfortable chairs
d tables of a proper height."
nditions quite similar to those joined upon the gracious host or stess by the epicurean essayists the Continent.

Noise is distracting. Even music, it bids for attention, can be a awback to the enjoyment of food.
ıt if it is unobtrusive and relax-g, that's fine.

Relaxation appears to be the key relaxation and self-confidence.
ommander Kotschevar used every ssible means to build up the selfteem of his judges. Few of them ıssed the basic test every time.
ıt though they failed, they were ver told of their failures but were lowed to take the ensuing tests st as if they had been in top rm. (The results however were ot counted.) Always, whether they ıssed or not, they were "praised the skies."

Fatigue, worry and tension have most deleterious effect upon the nsitivity of the taste buds. So n't expect your husband to apeciate a delicate dish after a long ard day at the office. Give him a out, sturdy, full-flavored, com-rting meal and smother your chain when he gobbles your trium-ıant sauce without comment.

It is true what they say in the criptures that the dinner of herbs here love is tastes far better than he fatted calf and discord thereith." An argument at the dinner ble can make your guinea hen nder glass taste like so much asteboard. So also can many, or o strong, cocktails.

As for smoking, many investiga-rs insist on non-smokers. Others sk testers to refrain from smoking r at least an hour before the test.
ll the classic epicurean mores for-id smoking either before or durg the meal. But a good cigar or garette is generally believed to ıhance the enjoyment of coffee ıd liqueurs after a heavy dinner.

For really careful tasting, hower, even a cup of black coffee ıay prove overpowering.

Hunger is still the best sauce—ıe most effective sensitizer of the alate. Our taste buds are keenest, researchers prove, at 11:30 in the morning and 4:30 in the afternoon.

More Fun!

What does it all mean, this probing of our taste buds, this invasion of the privacy of the palate? Certainly the end must be far more than mere statistics. Let's hope it leads us to a discovery of things as they really are, to a new appreciation of basic flavors undefiled. Once we take time to stop, think and taste, subtle natural goodness, subtle overtones come through to us. New vistas of delight emerge.

We take up, for instance, a piece of camembert cheese—an entrancing mélange of flavors all the more interesting as you attempt to analyze it. First, note the saltiness, a trace of acidity, a touch of bitterness. All three are distinct and rather easily recognized. Next try to perceive a certain sweetness. This is more difficult to seize upon, but if you concentrate it will come through. Now try to detect the various delicate aromas that modify and enhance these basic primary flavors and make the flavor of camembert cheese what it is—highly individual, impossible to imitate. Note also the texture, the smooth, creamy-cool velvet feel of the food in the mouth and at last try consciously to bring all these sensations together in one. Then, only then, have you really tasted camembert.

Who knows what else our Taster's Test can do? Perhaps having sensitized your palate, you may join that coterie who consider the overworked salt cellar and the sugar bowl and condiment bottle as gorgons standing in the way of true appreciation.

Maybe you too will decide that a perfectly grilled lamb chop never tasted so good as it does when, guiltless of any salt but only elegantly dusted with rosemary, it is served in true Tuscan style with a squeeze of lemon juice.

Perhaps you will really begin to enjoy tea as tea when you cut down on the sugar. Or then, on the other hand, having become really taste-conscious, you may decide that everything—but everything—in your household tastes flat and you'll start making-like-mad with all the herbs and spices on the shelf.

to me they are a kind of "gaiety insurance." For after one or two people put on the hats, very soon everyone follows suit, and the laughter level goes up noticeably. (That's one thing a hostess waits for expectantly!)

I am in favor of a long, leisurely menu for Sunday. You have all day. Why not feel that way? Capture that sense of a lovely day going on forever. Even you can feel leisurely, because most of the work has been done on this menu the day before, and you are going to get your husband to grill the chickens right in front of everybody, which he loves doing. All you have to do is make the corn muffins (from a mix) and toss the salad. If you organize things right you can feel like a guest at your own party.

Here's the menu, complete with all the details, for achieving this relaxed day.

With the Drinks
(about which more later)
Cherry Tomatoes Greek Olives
Curried Peanuts or Pecans Worcestershire
Sliced Smoked Salmon
(accompany with wedges of lemon and a pepper grinder, to be eaten on thin rye or pumpernickel)

The Drink:
St. Regis Fruit Punch

First Course:
Cold Cracked Crab or Baby Lobsters with Sour Cream Sauce

Second Course:
Chickens grilled over charcoal or on rotisseries with shallot butter sauce, done in front of the guests right there on the terrace
Mixed Green Salad
Hot Corn Bread with Melted Butter

Rum Baba Robert
Coffee

Wine Throughout:
A Delicate White Wine

If all this takes from 1 to 5 P.M. what of it? I assure you your guests will want to dawdle if you have arranged all the factors properly.

I believe summer menus should be worked around the best local produce when it is at its peak. I feature the fruits and vegetables that are absolutely tops that week. For the same reason, chicken is a good food to make the hub of the meal, for by August the young broilers are getting fat and juicy and some types of shellfish are at their best.

That is one reason why I serve as a first drink, St. Regis Fruit Punch. I use beer glasses conical in shape (the Pilsener shape). For each glass one jigger of brandy, one small peach or one large apricot. (Whatever fruit you are using, peaches or apricots, use the same brandy as the fruit.) In each glass put one jigger of brandy, then your whole peach or apricot, then pour over it a chilled white wine.

If you want your party extra special, serve champagne over the fruit and brandy. However I personally prefer a still wine and any of the following are delicious: Alamden's Pinot Blanc, Buena Vista's Sylvaner Traminer or white Riesling. Some other delicious wines are Concannon's Haut Sauterne, Chablis or Sauvignon Blanc. All of these wines were medal winners and are good when you're serving fish or chicken.

A big bowl of little cherry tomatoes, washed the last minute and salted while wet and sprinkled with Java cracked pepper, makes a good refreshing appetizer plus a bowl of nuts, either curried peanuts or pecans Worcestershire (these recipes appeared in HOUSE BEAUTIFUL July, 1951), a bowl of spicy olives and a tray of smoked salmon with capers, wedges of lemon and a pepper grinder.

Order the chickens and crab well ahead of time, say the Monday before your luncheon. You will know whether live crabs will be in market and you will not have to change your menu at the last minute. On Wednesday of that week I do all the mundane chores, check the bottle goods, the corn muffin mix, etc. I fill all the salt and pepper shakers. I also make the coffee.

"Wait a minute: did you say make the coffee? Are you crazy?" you gasp.

Yes, I make the coffee by the filtron method. I use bottled spring water, a pound of coffee and it makes an essence that you can store in your refrigerator in sterilized bottles for weeks. It is so simple to just heat water in your glass coffee maker and add the coffee essence. It is a very easy way to make iced coffee with it too.

blespoon chopped chives
blespoon chopped parsley

blespoons tarragon vinegar

For 16

1 heaping teaspoon fresh dill
1 pint sour cream
1 teaspoon sugar
½ teaspoon M.S.G. (monosodium glutamate)
½ teaspoon salt
Pepper
2 shallots
1 medium tomato
2 tablespoons chopped chives
2 tablespoons chopped parsley
2 teaspoons burnet or chopped cucumber
3 tablespoons tarragon vinegar
⅓ cup olive oil

For 26

1 tablespoon fresh dill
1½ pints sour cream
1 tablespoon sugar
1 teaspoon M.S.G. (monosodium glutamate)
1 teaspoon salt
Pepper
3 shallots
1 large tomato
2 heaping tablespoons chopped chives
2 heaping tablespoons chopped parsley
2 heaping teaspoons burnet or chopped cucumber
4 tablespoons tarragon vinegar
½ cup olive oil

Mash shallots or garlic (if you use garlic use small cloves or run it through the garlic press, which I prefer) and stir in the sugar. You can mix this in a small covered container that you will store this in. Add other herbs, seasonings and stir in the sour cream.

After all is mixed well, add tomato and then a little vinegar and a little oil, stir until well mixed and then add a little more vinegar and oil, alternating until all is used. Cover and store in refrigerator 24 hours until ready to use.

Serve cracked crab on a huge tray, with the sour cream sauce in a side sauce dish or shell. It is fun to have hot wet napkins wrung out in hot water so your guests can get the crab off their hands before the chicken course.

Preparing the Chickens

You can get the chickens ready Saturday morning. I have the butcher cut mine in half, so I don't have to do it. If you order chickens at a poultry market, have them "draw" the chickens when they are killed. Don't let them hand you a "line" about their spoiling. If you keep them in your refrigerator, they will keep several days.

lunch or supper. I usually cook the livers and have them on toast for luncheon.

Wipe chickens with a damp cloth, pull out pin feathers that might have been missed. Lightly flour, then rub well with softened butter. (Don't be frugal about the amount, either!) Sprinkle with Java cracked pepper and store in the refrigerator until ready to put on the fire. Allow half a chicken per person if they are young broilers of 2½ pounds each, dressed. If they are young fryers and weigh three to four pounds each when dressed, allow a quarter for the gals and a half for the men.

For the chickens, the timing varies. There is the heat of the fire to consider and the size of the chickens. Small chickens will take about 45 minutes, large ones will take more than an hour. You will need at least half a pound of melted butter, and if the chickens are large and the time is longer for the cooking, ¾ pound of butter will be necessary.

You can give an added taste treat to the chickens with 2 to 3 heaping tablespoons of chopped shallots or green onions. Add them to the basting butter. Tarragon is also a delicious flavor addition. White wine put in the butter the last 15 minutes of cookery also is delectable. Use the same wine that you serve for luncheon. Buena Vista Vine Brook, a California "Rhine" wine, is excellent.

The Green Salad

The green salad is more interesting if you can get different varieties of lettuce. Look for color and texture. A tender butter lettuce or limestone lettuce, red lettuce and a chunky hard-head lettuce and Romaine are all good. Of course watercress and Belgian endive are also great additions. Chopped herbs are a must: Parsley, chives and tarragon (the tarragon leaves should be whole) make your salad outstanding. (If you are having chicken tarragon, do not add the tarragon leaves to the salad.)

Allow one large head of lettuce to every four persons. For the tender small heads of lettuce, allow one head to two guests.

The day before—Saturday—make your mind a blank and settle down with the radio going and wash the lettuce. Wash it leaf by leaf, running your thumb down the center to get all the grit off. Wash both sides of each leaf with care. Never soak lettuce. It is wishful thinking to hope that the dirt will float out if you let the lettuce soak in a pan of water. It not only ruins the taste of your lettuce, but does not accomplish your purpose.

Never buy tired lettuce; the taste has gone when it is wilted and you can not bring it back.

Put lettuce in a tea towel and take outside and whirl around your head in a motion à-la-Bendix to get rid of excess water. Store in the same wet tea towel in a Nylon bag and it is ready to use after thorough chilling. Tender lettuce keeps for two to three days, head lettuce and Romaine keep for nearly a week if you have not broken the leaves too much. Stacking the lettuce in the tea towel is important. Put the solid heads in one, the heavier greens in another and the tender ones in another.

When ready to serve, put in a chilled bowl and have chilled plates ready. Keep all this out of the sun until it is served and placed before your guests.

Salad Dressing

1 large shallot or two green onions
1 teaspoon sugar
1 teaspoon M.S.G. (monosodium glutamate)
1 teaspoon Spice Islands Beau Monde Seasoning
1 teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon Java cracked pepper or freshly ground pepper
½ cup best tarragon vinegar
1½ cups olive oil

Run shallot through a garlic press into your mortar. Add sugar and mix with pestle; add dry seasonings and then vinegar. Let stand a while, then put in Pyrex pitcher for ease of measurement and stir vigorously adding oil slowly. Store in bottle until ready to use and shake well before serving.

Mix salad with dressing, tossing well, just before you are ready to serve. Don't use too much. Too much is when it accumulates in a puddle in the bottom of the bowl. Then you are marinating your greens.

Hot Cornbread

For the cornbread, I use the Dromedary corn muffin mix. I bake it in a low Descoware casserole (about 2½" deep) so that it is served in the same thing which keeps it hot longer. Follow their directions, but add an extra egg and a pinch of salt to the recipe. Just before serving, cut in squares, pour hot melted butter over the squares allowing ¼ pound for each two packages. This makes a dreamy cornbread, and you don't have to have butter on the table hence dispensing with butter plates. Honey or maple syrup drizzled over this is terrific.

Allow two packages for 8: four packages (using two casseroles) for 16 and six packages for 26.

Rum Baba Robert

The dessert that I dreamed up the other day has turned out to be better than I anticipated and it is easier than easy. If you have a French pastry shop in your locality, ask the chef to make a Rum Baba for you. Or you can make it yourself from one of the cake mixes. It is a very light dough, sort of like a brioche, cooked in a circular mold with a hole in the center, glazed with a rum glaze with a few nuts and cherries as decoration. Otherwise get a light sponge ring cake at your baker's and fancy it up. I heaped strawberries in the center, vanilla ice cream on the outside and an apricot sauce with rum flavoring over the ice cream.

Allow three boxes of strawberries for 8 persons, discarding small berries and saving them for breakfast for the family. Seven boxes for 26. Hull berries, lightly sugar and store in covered containers until ready to use. Do not store longer than overnight.

Allow 1 quart to 1½ quarts of ice cream for 8, which is more than ample: 2½ quarts for 16 and 3½ quarts for 26.

The apricot sauce is very simple. Get the cheapest pack of apricots (of a good label), that is, the halves of apricots, unpeeled. One No. 2½ can is enough sauce for 26, so if you are having a smaller group use half a can.

Apricot Sauce

1 whole can of apricots
2 jiggers Demerara rum (Lemon Hart & Sons)
1 jigger Myers' Jamaica rum
3 jiggers Bacardi light rum
1 tablespoon vanilla
1 tablespoon sugar

Whizz apricots in your whizzer (electric blender to you) until it is purée, add sugar, rums and vanilla and mix well. Store in a covered container until ready

e. This recipe will do for two ge babas and serve 26.

For 8

ups apricots with juice
easpoon vanilla jigger Demerara rum jigger Jamaica rum
jiggers Bacardi light rum

If you make your own sponge ke or get it at the local bakery, e the following glaze (which lets u approximate a rum baba):
cup Karo crystal white syrup:
tablespoons Bacardi light rum.
Put syrup in Pyrex pitcher, place in pan of water and heat. When syrup is thin, add rum and mix well. Drizzle over cake to make it glisten and to flavor it also. When you use this recipe make it twice for one cake. I think you have better luck in doing it slowly; it takes about 5 minutes. So just keep the pan of hot water on the stove and keep making the sauce until you have finished your cake. You will need four times the above amount for two cakes. In other words, 1 cup syrup and 8 tablespoons of rum.
Decorate with slivered almonds.

ney're just part of the way a ane works, and every change in rottling, every change in the set-ng of the engines or the operation the propellers will cause a vari-ion in the noises you hear.

A plane usually makes its big-st racket at take-off when it is ven its full power in order to ecome airborne. At 400 or 500 feet ower is reduced, but it is still oisy as the plane climbs up to s cruising altitude. But when this oint is reached, the pilot shifts ears, so to speak, slackening to a nooth running tempo. He is ac-ually changing the pitch of the ropellers. The noise slackens, too, ist as it does when you shift from ew to high in an automobile.

But, for any one of a hundred ood reasons, the pilot may decide om time to time to use more or ss power. For instance, he may crease the power (and the roar) order to climb out of an overast, or to skip a mass of turbulent ir which might cause a bumpy ight, or to speed through a head ind. Or he may simply be hurry-ng to get where he's going on chedule. He may cut back on ower (and noise) if he has a good ailwind to whip him along, or he ay be taking it easy to keep on is flight schedule, or he may be arting to descend, at which point ne engines often sound as if they ere quietly fading away. But what-ver his reasons, the changes in ound are standard procedure.

Probably the most startling ex-erience in a Listener's life occurs igh in the air when the pilot may low engines down to "desludge" he superchargers. These super-hargers are necessary to give the orrect fuel-air ratio at high altiudes. Unless you know what it's all about, you get the rather unhealthy impression that the plane has suddenly and silently stopped in mid-air. Then it rumbles a bit and starts up on its way again.

Some pilots are humanitarian enough to explain all this before it happens, thus saving people like us considerable private panic. But some passengers hate any such loudspeaker chit-chat from the pilot. It disturbs their sleep.

Just before landing Listeners are aware of an ominous-sounding klump, but that's just the landing gear locking into place. They may also be alarmed by a weird, banshee squeal, a noise frequently made by the wing flaps when they're let down to slow up the plane. And one of the greatest of all safety procedures can scare you out of your wits—the sudden, plane-shaking roar of the propellers when the pilot reverses them at high power, just after the plane has reached the ground. This works like a mighty, skidproof brake.

Many air travelers are never even aware of these differences in sound. But often a lot of what you think you hear is conditioned by the way your ears react to differences in altitude and air pressure.
Sometimes when you've decided that the engines have failed one and all, a couple of quick swallows will bring back their fine old roar clear as a bell.

One thing you can't hear on a plane but which can throw a good scare into you if you're not prepared for it is the fireworks you see shooting out of the exhaust vents at night. It's just the hot exhaust gases escaping. On a DC-7 it looks like the burning of Rome, but that's how the engineers planned it. So relax.

ask what I should like to have done on earth. I plan to reply, "Composed Don Giovanni."

John Christi, organizer and patron of Glyndebourne, literally scours the earth each year for the most perfect Mozart performers and, when they arrive at Glynde, Sussex, these primae of donnae are somehow made into a superlative team. You can understand, then, why musicians and even critics buy the Glyndebourne albums of the Don, of The Marriage of Figaro, Cosi fan Tutte and Idomenco; and ask for new ones.

The Casals Festivals in Southern France produce another kind of excitement. Since 1950 they have become annual reunions of friends, incidentally the world's distinguished instrumentalists: Rudolph Serkin, Myra Hess, Isaac Stern, Alexander Schneider, Eugene Istomin, Erica Morini, Mieczeslaw Horszowski, Joseph Szigeti and others, all under Pablo Casals' direction. These dedicated soloists come together to say things to each other with their violins and pianos, flutes and 'cellos, to hear and to discuss musically what they've been thinking about Bach, Mozart, Schubert, Beethoven. There is perhaps no better way to describe the experience of listening to Columbia's magnificent feat of recording the Casals Festivals of 1950, 1951 and 1952 than to compare it to overhearing, not simply reading about, the word-play of Shakespeare and Jonson in the Mermaid Tavern, Goethe's conversations with Eckermann, Johnson's with Boswell, Gertrude Stein's with Picasso.

It doesn't matter so much that some of the pieces played at the Casals Festivals have been better recorded, in the sense of having been better engineered, on records by the Budapest or Paganini or other great quartets. The performances at Prades and Perpignan are unique: they have a spontaneity and contagion, an individuality and personality that only chamber music among friends can have. It is music at its purest; and with 'cellist Casals it is music with the purest of musicians. Only a complete listing of what is to be heard on the total of 35 12" records (roughly 35 hours of playing) could give a partial idea of Columbia's offering to the musical traveler-at-home. It constitutes a sort of "five-foot shelf" of chamber music chosen by Casals, and includes the Brandenburg and other concertos; trios, quartets and quintets; sonatas and solos; the profoundest string works of Bach, Beethoven, Brahms, Mozart, Schubert and Schumann. I should rather have these records than take a much more expensive trip to Paris—I am tempted to say Prades.

BROODING over Bayreuth, of course, is the ghost of Richard Wagner, summoned yearly by grandsons Weiland and Wolfgang Wagner, artistic directors of the Bayreuth Festival. To put it gently, Bayreuth has become a shrine, an altar on which many a patient audience has been sacrificed. The festival there begins at ten in the morning at the grave of Richard and Cosima, so putting listeners into a state of awe right off. This listener, however, prefers Wagner several other ways: first of all, conducted by Toscanini; secondly, in the cooler atmosphere of a neutral opera house. And he recommends a few albums of Wagner operas, recorded at the Bayreuth Festival itself, which leave the sentimental aura unrecorded. (Incidentally, I don't want to seem to be suggesting that recordings are preferable to concert-going—to separate art from the artist is to hasten our own dehumanization. Besides, records are simply not that good. It is hard enough, as some one has remarked, to move a concert grand piano into your living room without even thinking of putting a Wagnerian orchestra into it, much less a whole musical festival, by means of a thin, however hi-fi, record.)

These are the albums: (1) a complete London recording of Lohengrin made last year during a performance at the Bayreuth Festival Theatre, Joseph Keilberth conducting the festival chorus and orchestra with Eleanor Steber as Elsa, Astrid Varnay as Ortrud and Wolfgang Windgassen as Lohengrin; (2) a complete Columbia recording of Die Meistersinger made at Bayreuth in 1951 with Herbert von Karajan conducting such soloists as Elisabeth Schwarzkopf, Otto Edelmann and Erich Kunz; and (3) the Third Act of Die Walküre which was recorded the same year with von Karajan conducting, Astrid Varnay as Brunnhild and Bjoerling as Wotan. (4) For Parsifal followers, London offers an album of 6 12″ long-playing records made at Bayreuth in 1951 with Knappertsbusch conducting.

THE European festivals are carefully staggered not only to allow tourists time to make the musical rounds, but also to permit musicians to perform first at one, then at another. Wilhelm Fürtwängler, for instance, conducts at Bayreuth, Besançon, Florence, Salzburg and Vienna; Mitropoulos at Florence and Salzburg; Munch returns to Tanglewood from Bordeaux; von Karajan is everywhere; and so are Elisabeth Schwarzkopf, Rubinstein, Mozart and Richard Strauss. Programming a private music festival, the traveler-at-home can play it several ways: He can combine the magnificent Schwarzkopf with the magnificent Mozart on a record that is fully up to both—as in the Angel release of Mozart Opera Arias sung by this great soprano. He can combine Schwarzkopf with Franz Lehar in another truly Angelic album, The Merry Widow. And in the same sunny album, which recalls old Vienna as much as fin-de-siècle Paris, he will hear Erich Kunz, Nicolai Gedda and Emmy Loose.

Staying in Vienna (in his mind), he can follow Fürtwängler conducting the Vienna Philharmonic in a new (London) recording of Franck's Symphony in D minor, or Karl Boehm, also scheduled for the Vienna Festival, conducting the same orchestra in songs and duets from Richard Strauss. But best of all, he has a choice that no festival goer has: He can put on the immortal (Victor) performance of Strauss's Der Rosenkavalier with the prewar Vienna Opera starring Lotte Lehmann, Elisabeth Schumann, Maria Olszewska and Richard Mayr. Or he can play a more recent Vienna Opera (Columbia) recording with the ubiquitous von Karajan conducting Mozart's Magic Flute with soloists Lipp, Seefried, Dermota, Kunz and London. When it comes to a modern opera like Alban Berg's Wozzeck, performed at the Vienna Festival this year, he has almost all the advantages, I believe, over the festival goer, if he has the Mitropoulos recording. Wozzeck's original and peculiar musical form takes a good deal of listening and relistening to, before its quality becomes fully apparent. (The festival goer, however, has the one clear advantage of seeing the drama as well as hearing the music.)

THE wonderful La Scala Opera company is appearing at the Vienna as well as the Holland Festivals, and here Angel Records offers most: It has just concluded a contract with La Scala for a minimum of four recorded operas a year including at least five by Verdi, three by Puccini and two by Rossini. I Puritani, Tosca and Cavalleria Rusticana have been released so far. They are all beautifully done, but the fiery Tosca of Maria Callas tops all other Toscas, and together with conductor Victor de Sabata and singers Di Stefano and Tito Gobbi, she makes this Puccini opera really storm through your living room. In Cavalleria the same company turns your room into a festive Sicilian piazza, blazing with sun and passion.

Another Italian opera, Verdi's Otello, will be heard at three festivals—Stockholm, Wiesbaden and Holland. Can there be much hesitation about which recording to schedule for home playing? Hardly. The new Toscanini—NBC Symphony album (Victor) leaves no other choice.

Nor are the French opera companies silent this summer; they are to be heard at least in the French festivals, often with André Cluytens conducting. If, by chance, you have never attended a performance of the Opéra-Comique, there's an easy way to start. Try the Angel one-record Les Mamelles de Tirésias by Francis Poulenc, a hilarious opéra-bouffe based on a sur-realist poem by Apollinaire. New, too, is the one-record, satin-smooth (Angel) pressing of Ravel's L'Heure Espagnole. There is also Columbia's album of Bizet's Carmen, complete and charming. All three are with Cluytens conducting the Opéra-Comique.

We haven't even mentioned festivals at Wiesbaden, Florence, Edinburgh, Salzburg, Munich, Lucerne or Venice! And all with programs that intrigue and pique the home listener, who would like to duplicate them on his phonograph. (You can play this game, if you wish, by getting the various festival programs from a travel agent and checking the artists and programs against the Schwann catalogue of long-playing records.)

However, it's time to say a few words about the 21 or more music festivals in America, from the May Festival in Ann Arbor to the Worcester Festival in October, at both of which Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra play leading roles. (For these artists Columbia's catalog is primary.) At Tanglewood, our finest festival, Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony take over (and so does Victor's catalogue). Since the Tanglewood Festival this year honors Berlioz's 150th anniversary, there is, naturally, a good deal of Berlioz being played:

Romeo and Juliet (Munch recording with Boston Symphony recommended), Harold in Italy (Beecham-Columbia here), Symphonie Fantastique (Monteux-Victor), Requiem (Columbia) and the rarely heard opera, The Damnation of Faust. At the moment Columbia offers the only recording of Berlioz's Faust, but Victor promises one with Munch and the Boston Symphony this fall, which should, of course, give the home listener a pretty good idea of what he missed by not going to Tanglewood in the first place.

of the good years could be distributed over the lean ones. Out of that surplus, too, labor could now be expended in unheard of amounts on all sorts of creative activities, religion, art, law, government, and not least, the art of building more permanent structures which provided for other forms of continuity and storage, such as temples and libraries.

Probably from the very beginning, storage applied to more than food: it applied likewise to the preservation of spiritual surpluses and to the establishment of spiritual continuity. Stone monuments, memorials, hieroglyphics, books, works of art, contain in transmissible form the essence of other lives. Civilization, the art of binding the past to the future, of uniting the living and dead, the distant and the near, in an ever-growing family, is dependent not merely on the permanent record but upon a means of keeping those records in safe places, where they are most likely to be preserved from flood and fire and mould and vandalism.

As the facilities for storage increase, the records pile up: as the records pile up, the opportunities for choice and selection multiply. If food storage is the community's counterpart of the body's having in reserve extra quantities of sugar, which may be poured into the blood stream to meet a sudden physical challenge, the storage of man's spiritual possessions may be likened to the function of memory in the brain. Thanks to the brain's capacity to store sights and sounds and meanings, we bring to the present moment the experience of a whole lifetime. No human act makes much sense when it is totally unconnected with its past and its future, when it exists only within a moment-to-moment, here-today-gone-tomorrow context.

All these facts have their counterpart in family life. One of the reasons for settling down in a permanent household is to have the security and continuity, the surplusage and the power of choice that go along with a fixed dwelling place and a physical means of storage. The family that has a large pantry full of preserved fruits and vegetables, a refrigerator and a freezer has escaped from the constraints and the anxieties of a narrow skimpy existence.

But the storage of food is only a small part of the function of storage, however vital it may be. Even more important for family life is the part that well-allott storage space may play in pr moting sentiments and feelin that bring the generations togeth and give the young, long befo marriage, a prospective sense their own destiny.

Each household has its own hi tory, not usually put together a narrative, but preserved noneth its own pictures and other worl of art, its photographs, motion pi tures, letters, diaries, children toys and children's fabrication

If no place is provided for sto age, all these memorials, great an small, important and trivial, mu be thrown indiscriminately on th scrap-heap. When that happen not merely is there no conscio family record, but the unconscio witness of things that have r mained in existence, mute, passiv until some one uncovers them, als disappears. Yet nothing brings child closer to his parents tha the sense of their having been chi

dren, too. A battered doll, an old composition book, a high-school magazine, the scattered debris of a life long past have the power to evoke a kind of sympathy and piety that mere words, even loving words, do not convey; and all the better when the very distance in time equalizes the relationship by giving the young a sense of amused superiority.

THE Victorians, who with all their little foibles, produced and nourished large families and a loyal family life, had the stuffy custom of putting all their possessions and souvenirs on parade. They did their storing, so to say, in public; and that was a mistake. In revolt against this litter and clutter, this too public sentimentality, this over-flaunting of possessions and this visual over-emphasis of private keepsakes, however ugly and useless, we moderns have swept our houses clean—alas, too clean! Though we now have space and order, we have bought this at a high price; since in achieving these desirable qualities we did not take pains to preserve continuity and history, because we did not understand that the sentimental is as vital to family life as the practical, and that they need not get in each other's way, provided we allow a definite place for each of them.

For what is a family, but a group of people, brought together by the need for reproduction and kept together by a hundred ties: shared possessions, shared memories, shared sentiments, shared prospects? Some of those ties are as coarse as a rope; some, even stronger, are as fine as a filament of hair. Remove those possessions, set aside those sentiments, provide no houseroom for the objects that symbolize those ties, and the early break-up of the home, into a group of discordant personalities, eager to break apart at the earliest moment, all too easily follows.

If this analysis of the function of storage in the household is sound, how is it that it has been so long overlooked? There are various possible answers to this question. One is that the dwelling house has been until recently, an extremely crude structure. Even when its rooms were differentiated, even when space was ample, its inner equipment was meager. Until half a century ago, built-in closets for bedrooms were uncommon in many parts of our country; and it is only recently that architects have been willing to design a whole wall as a closet.

The other reason for our backwardness has been due to the fact that in the traditional dwelling house, whether urban or rural, a certain amount of crude, undetermined space was in fact left over in the cellar and in the garret. Sometimes, too, it even boasted more rooms above ground than the owner knew what to do with. True, most of this storage space was unplanned; it lacked facilities for easy access, or for keeping it clean and tidy; often it was poorly lighted. But as long as the cellar existed—and before central heating made it too hot—it could be used as a cold closet for food. And as long as the attic existed, it could be treated, and in fact was treated, as a museum of domestic history. The generation that grew up in such houses knew the pleasure of masquerading in their mother's or their grandmother's discarded clothes, or of spending a rainy afternoon poring over old diaries, old account books, old magazines. What better education in local history and family continuity could have been provided? The dark seclusion of the attic, with its musty smell, only intensified the delight. But this crude, undifferentiated storage space too easily became a den of murky disorder. Looking upon that dismal result, the progressive architect cheerfully eliminated both cellar and garret. In the interest of clean form, the function of storage was forgotten. With that decision, a precious item in the spiritual economy of the family was written off.

DO NOT think that this is a plea for bringing back the high gabled roof or the dark cheerless cellar in order to restore lost storage space. Neither the attic nor the cellar was, perhaps, worth keeping as such, even when electricity lighted the first and oil heating and a concrete floor and moisture-proof walls kept the second from being dirty and damp. Even if, on occasion, these older chambers are retained, their use must be reconsidered, and the great distinction between dead and live storage space must be applied here, as well as to the rest of the house.

We now, in fact, have the opportunity to re-think and re-define the whole function of storage, and to see not merely that an adequate proportion of the total space is allotted to it, but that this space is distributed, in the right amounts, with the right accessories, throughout the house. To make such an apportionment, we must bear in mind the purpose of storage—the preservation of a surplus of goods, physical and spiritual, above the requirements of daily use, as a way of confronting unexpected emergencies, of meeting seasonal changes, of offering a greater variety of choices, of serving as a connecting link between the past and the future. If storage is the way of freeing the present from the encumbrances of the past, without destroying that past, it is also a way of enriching the future without overburdening the present.

In matters like food, clothes, dishes, and books the modern household has made the beginnings of a sound apportionment of storage space. Where means are ample, however, more space might often be allotted to provide for seasonal variations. The need for variety, for fresh stimuli, also calls for storage facilities. If the owners of a house have a collection of prints and pictures, they will enjoy them all the more keenly if the same ones do not remain constantly on the walls, but are changed from time to time; and this demands special closets and racks, for easy access.

Children, too, are usually happier in their play activities if their current outfit of toys and equipment is limited. With some place to stow away the surplus games and toys, a vigilant parent may re-introduce them at intervals, with as much pleasure to the child as if they were brand-new. Even after a child outgrows a toy or a piece of furniture, it may long have a sentimental association for him. My own son jealously preserved, even when he was ready for the Army, a battered little horse on wheels, given to him when he was three. It was a precious talisman, a bedtime guardian that had kept watch with him in sickness and health, which he intended to pass on to his own child.

This desire to hand on something of one's own life to the next generation was in the past perhaps often pushed too far in a combination of tyranny and piety. I have known New England families, with a diminishing number of descendants, whose households became a shambles, as each new death dumped a fresh load of ancient furniture and books into it. But practiced selectively, prudently, this passing on of visible mementoes, full of meaning and "mana" that no one else can understand, is an essential part of family relationship.

HOW much easier it is for the young to marry earlier and set up at least a sketchy household, if they can draw for extras on their parents' hoard. Not less important, certainly, in giving continuity to the often-disrupted lives of the young, is the preservation of the tokens of their own youth. For lack of storage space—and understanding—many a modern parent has too ruthlessly cleaned out old toys and trinkets and souvenirs and shabby books that would have given his child a visible connecting link between his own childhood and the prospective life of his own children.

Each function of the household, then, each specialized kind of room needs its own appropriate type of storage space: a closet, a chest, an anti-chamber, a set of shelves. Withdrawn but accessible, out of sight but not completely out of mind, detached from the immediate present but ready at call to serve it. With the aid of such live storage one can keep a clean area for current living, without buying that peace and serenity by a downright impoverishment of one's life or by any fraying loose of one's family attachments. But even when one's daily needs are duly provided for, it will still be necessary to provide at least one special chamber for dead storage.

Today the ideal space for such a room would often be between the house and the garage, if the latter is attached. In this room, the objects that have passed out of use for a season, a year, or a generation, would be stowed away.

Exactly how much space should be dedicated to storage depends upon one's circumstances, one's tastes, and one's prospects. But it is probably better to err on the side of having too much than to live the constrained, meager, unattached, and thus relatively empty life that the absence of such space now enforces on so many people.

Our period has mastered the meaning of economy, particularly in architecture. It is now time to learn the importance of largesse. Not the least valuable part of a family's inheritance are the dear, often trivial, almost forgotten things that a casual visitor will never see. As long as visible reminders remain, some portion of that heritage will be passed on from generation to generation.

phonies, music of most delicate and loving workmanship, of beautiful melodic inspiration. It demonstrates Haydn's skill in orchestration (note, right in the introduction, the give and take of the melody as it appears in a combination of woodwinds and horn and again in the strings). The main theme of this movement shows that Haydn knew his Hungarian gypsy tunes. The second movement, the surprise movement, is a theme and variations, and its step-like theme is shown to us in many guises. The third movement is the minuet, very lively, and within its trio occurs a melody which is one of Haydn's happiest. The finale is a rondo containing more subtle surprises than does the second movement.

After Haydn had remained in London for a year and a half, he started on his journey homeward to Vienna. En route, he stopped off at Bonn and there renewed his acquaintance with a young man aged twenty-two who showed him a new cantata he had recently composed. Haydn found the cantata good and encouraged the young man. Ludwig van Beethoven, "to proceed with his studies." Thirty-one years later Beethoven composed the Ninth Symphony. In the Scherzo of the symphony occurs a surprising and sudden drumbeat.

WHAT MAKES AN AWARD-WINNING HOUSE?

architect stated (above) and then Mr. and Mrs. Gibbs added their own comments:

"People who visit us say ours is the first 'modern' house they've ever liked. But on the other hand, some modernists call it 'traditional', so we guess we have just what we wanted—the best of both. We have a house with the traditional lines and pitched roof of our wonderful farmhouses, and yet we have simplified our living.

"The idea of big glass windows bothered us at first, but now we wouldn't be without them. People ask, 'What do you do when the weather is bad?' But that's when our windows mean the most. We get light when they're in darkness. Besides, we can enjoy bad weather now! You should see those storms coming out of the sea—black thunder clouds with the sun behind them and the beach still bright! And in a snow storm there's nothing like our view."

JURORS, architects and owners all emphasized one thing to House Beautiful: the Gibbs house was excellent for New England but might very well be completely wrong for any other region.

This brings up the question: what is good New England architecture? In this connection a New England writer and architect, Robert Woods Kennedy, has many things to say (in an article published several years ago by the Magazine of Art).

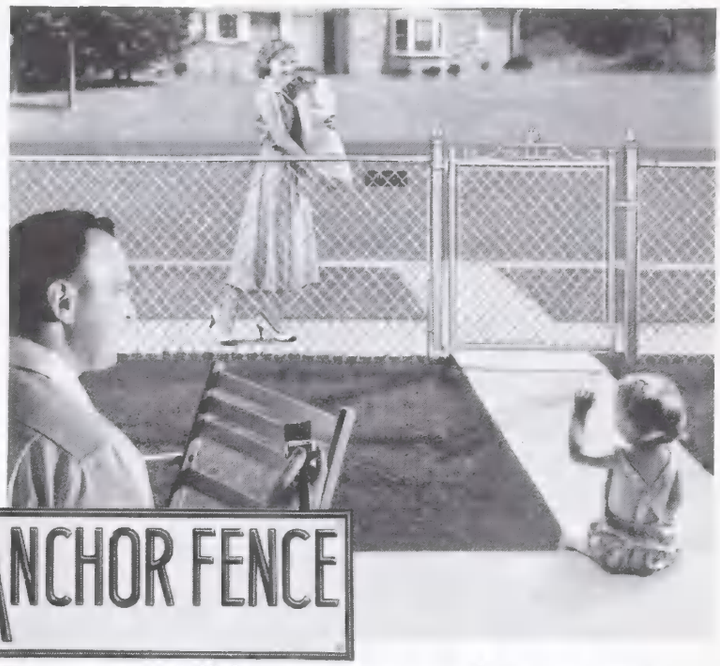
Mr. Kennedy believes, to begin with, that houses "must reflect their occupants' intellectual and social beliefs. They must take their place in the large fabric of town, landscape, culture . . . People's history and tradition vary from country to country and even from region to region." Growth and continuity, he says, are the real elements of the New England tradition, which is marked by "progressive adaptation of a basic form to improvements in glass and roofing materials, to central heat and to the philosophic changes that characterized the times.

"Just about everyone wants a house that will reflect his way of life: a house that will be light and sunny, that will take advantage of modern materials and techniques, that will take its place gracefully in New England, that has charm."

Consider the Gibbs house in terms of these characteristic features of New England architecture, according to Mr. Kennedy: "It was first and foremost a simple architecture. If a building was made of wood, it was all wood. If of brick, it was all brick. It was simple vertically as well as in plan; the numerous breaks in façade so common in contemporary plagiarism were never attempted. Its lively quality grows out of its unsymmetrical masses, out of the clear articulation of house, lean-to, shed wing or barn . . .

"Perhaps the most important of New England's qualities is smallness of scale. The region and its architecture are both diminutive . . . The typical New England landscape is apt to be tinged with an obscure nostalgic quality: It is sad, ingrowing and old. It requires simplicity. It looks with a sour eye on ostentation. In this Lilliputian landscape small-scaled structures are mandatory. Given this scale by nature itself, the region's architecture responds with a marked plainness. This smooth delicate quality is part and parcel of the inside as well as the exterior."



"If we are to achieve the good house," Mr. Kennedy concludes, "in other words a truly modern house . . . we must understand the simplicity of the old styles, achieved through articulation and uniformity of material. In fact, the whole scale, arrangement and fitness of the neighborhood must be the first consideration of those who wish to build the small house. For in the last analysis a house is as good, or as bad, as its setting."

It was this philosophy, we believe, that produced the Gibbs house for its New England setting, as it would produce an equally good, but vastly different, house in the setting of another region.

on the spot where the cushion is kept, so the fire in the diamond will really blaze. He knows how a diamond can look if given the proper aids.

This is how you need to look at a plant—before you decide to use it. You need to be aware of its leaf color, its branching habits, its ability to get along with its own kind and with other plants, and its habitat requirements.

The protographs of succulents on pages 72 and 73 are fine examples of plants used well, which is to say with style. They have been given the opportunity to look their best.

Just what are the stylish possibilities of succulents? What's unique about them?

Succulents are dwarf, squat plants, hugging the ground. They crowd beautifully, so they work fine where you want a solid carpet covering for the soil. You can't do this successfully with the usual perennial border flowers. Many of them must have vacant space around them or they grow miserably, or die.

Out of this fact, it follows that with succulents you can play with masses of color by putting one type against another type. The photographs show well how a mass of one variety has been composed next to a contrasting variety to achieve an over-all ground pattern. Because there are a large number of mixed genera and species of succulents, you can arrive at very attractive effects by a combination of these decorative succulents in either natural or formal designs.

Yet, though there is variety here, there is also unity within the great variety. Looking down on the succulents so beautifully deployed in the photographs on pages 72 and 73, you get an over-all feeling of velvety oneness. You are struck by their neighborliness, as you are struck, when flying over a village, by the wholeness, the oneness of it from the air, and you get the sense of peace that comes from such unity.

But then when you come closer to the village or to the succulents, each house, each plant, takes on character, individuality, variety, one from the other. There are variations in color, in form, in the way one clings to the crevice of a rock and the way another seems to strike out boldly on its own. They are like faces in a crowd: all alike from a distance, but each with its own features when you look closely. It is this kind of variety within unity that gives richness and vitality to a bed of succulents, that keeps it from going as dead as a carpet.

There is a second principle of all art that must be mentioned, dominance. Look at the village again. You see a church steeple or a town hall dominating the smaller buildings clustered around like chicks around a mother hen. Study the photographs of the succulents again. Notice how a strong rock or a larger plant seems to tie the smaller plants together in the same way, so that the succulents don't seem to be wandering aimlessly but have a strong center to which hey relate and from which, then, hey freely radiate.

So here is that fortunate and rare hing—a type of plant that looks beautiful individually but which also looks well massed with others of its kind. (So many plants need he opposite treatment—of being set apart in a dramatic, spotlit oneliness. And then the weeds rush in to fill the empty space around the prima donna.)

Succulents give you mass effects hat last 12 months of the year. Many plants give you mass effects for their short period of bloom, but hey too often contribute nothing to the over-all effect while they are lying back after bloom.

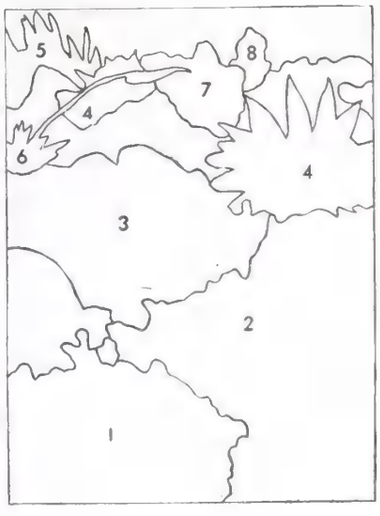
So here is a garden resident that can be counted on for permanence of effect. (As far north as New York many kinds stay quite respectable-looking right through the winter.) Here is another aspect of style—getting it right and having it stay that way without the nervous apologies that go with so many types of gardens.

Can you use succulents as pot plants indoors? Certainly. They do very well in the hot, dry atmosphere of the house.

You can lift favorites right out of the soil and work them into interesting table decorations. Succulents need no watering for the day or week they are out of their pots. Repot or replant, water, and ten days later you'd never guess they had been disturbed.

Succulents versus cacti

Many people use the terms interchangeably. Technically all cacti are succulents, but not all succulents are cacti. Succulent means that the plant is thick and juicy. Cacti have thick and juicy stems but the leaves are mere spines.



People mistakenly believe that succulents can live without water. They are extremely efficient in absorbing water rapidly during a rain and in doling it out slowly between rains. But without water they die. They don't die as quickly as other plants, true, but don't abuse them just because they can survive more adversity. On the other hand, don't drown them. They do best in sandy, well-drained soils. Whereas many plants can survive flooding for days, the succulents swiftly gorge themselves with water, then the submerged parts drown. Rot quickly starts. Soon the whole plant dies. So be sure soil drainage is good. No amount of rainfall will do permanent harm as long as the excess can drain away quickly.

BETTER WAYS TO COOK MEAT

Plan of Dr. Brown's smoke oven and how it relates to the kitchen fireplace. Firebox that feeds heat and smoke to meat chamber is lower than fireplace hearth. Notice that firebox for smoking is never directly below where meat hangs, but at right angles to smokestack. Thermador Electric oven and range.

Cross section of Dr. Brown's chinese smoker, shown on page 89. He sometimes cooks with gas (instead of wood) and then gets his smoke taste from a metal cup of dry oak sawdust, smoldering above heat source. When he broils, he throws wet oak sawdust on live coals. Besides adding to your taste oire, they have another func- They seal in the juices, pre- rying and keep in all natural flavors. One test on this score: If you have to salt the meat at any time, you have let too many of the natural salts drip out or burn up. A perfectly cooked piece of meat or fowl needs no salt. Surprising, but this is one way to tell when you have really become an expert.

6. You will have better results at cooking temperatures lower than you think. The slower and lower the better! Let that be your motto. The big, showy, leaping fire is the mark of the amateur. To keep it from getting ahead of you is your main concern. So you need ways to raise and lower the fire, ways to divert heat around the meat, ways to damp down the fire (without getting bad, greasy smoke), ways to put out sudden spurts of flame.

7. What about barbecue sauces? These mean so many things to so many people it is hard to talk about them. Here are two experts on this point:

Trader Vic says: "Marinades and barbecue sauces are used to overcome particular flavors and to give additional character to certain meats. For delicate-flavored meats, such as fowl, veal and some cuts of pork such as loins, marinades are not necessary. Barbecue sauces are for lamb (which has a strong flavor), some cuts of beef and spareribs. On spareribs use a glaze to retain juices and flavor."

Harold Bartron says on the seasoning of charcoal broiled meat, his specialty: "Our best advice is to use little or none. The natural flavor of the meat, which is preserved by this method of cooking, shows itself."

No less mar- than the new stem lengths e great sizes of the flower I once counted 137 florets ordinary scarlet variety and 90 to 100 are not uncommon, although there are many excellent varieties which average 20 to 25 florets to a flower head.

As with other flowers used lavishly in the garden, it's wise to stick to plants of one or two varieties, although similar varieties of different sizes or forms but with flowers of identical color may sometimes be used together.

The bi-colored varieties are seldom as effective in the gardens as those of a single hue. There are still some unattractive magentas, too, but you'll find plenty of good clear colors to choose from. Pastels seem to fade and look washed out in hot sunlight, and if such is your location, you'll get a more impressive display with reds which outdo the sun in intensity. On the other hand, white and pastels show up beautifully in night gardens.

Plantsmen strive for full, round flowers without the two elongated "rabbit ears" or upper petals of the original geranium species. In singles this gives a phlox-effect to the florets; in doubles it may be camellia-like. Olivia Kuser is a lovely pure white single of the former type, which, incidentally, holds on to its petals instead of scattering them over lawn or terrace.

This matter of holding or dropping finished florets while the others on the stem bloom is another matter which affects the usefulness of a variety. The petals of Olivia Kruser dry up inconspicuously. On many other white and pastel varieties, particularly the doubles, they turn brown and spoil the appearance of the whole flower head unless carefully removed by hand. If your plants are to be seen at close range this is a disadvantage.

If, however, you plan a bold and brassy bed of geraniums to be viewed at some distance, as from a terrace, you may be happier with spectacular double varieties which hold their spent florets intact through wind and storm, giving the impression of large perfect flowers until the last bud has opened. It's wise, however, to remove the flower heads some time before this happens, not only because the effect is tidier, but because the earlier flowers have a tendency to waste the plant's strength on seeds.

Of the many hundreds of geraniums grown more than a century ago, a surprising number still appear in the commercial collections of geranium specialists. Among my favorites are the single apricot-orange Maxine Kovaleski, as clear-toned as any modern variety, and Happy Thought, another single. This one has absolutely irresistible bright, cheery, vermilion flowers which to my mind completely discount the small, bright green irregularly splotched foliage.

Fancy-leaved. Interest in the fancy-leaved geraniums has generally lagged behind that of the other varieties, but one or two well-grown specimens, can be delightful if given a simple setting.

Here, too, there are still some good varieties dating back to the 1800's, but the one most attractive to me is new. Named Velma, it boasts red, green and brown patches on a cream background with very little overlapping of colors. The result is a lighter, clear-toned leaf that can be very effective in a night-lighted garden.

Dwarfs. Relative newcomers in geranium ranks are several series of dwarfs or miniatures, often less than six inches high, seldom more than one foot, even when five or six years old. Particularly appealing are their tiny rosettes of foliage which seem to be either dark with rich color patterns, or a light green.

Sometimes the flowers are in perfect proportion to the tiny plants; often there seems to be twice as much flower as foliage.

While these are primarily collectors' items and are priced as such, they do have some delightful uses in the garden and terrace.

For the small unglazed clay strawberry pot, they are ideal, probably the best choice for that container since the strawberry took leave of it. Since they are compact in growth and give more color for space occupied than any other geraniums, they could be useful as edging plants which stay in bounds. And how about working out a connoisseur's carpet of plants using leaf colors and/or flowers to replace a few flagstones in your terrace?

A collection of dwarfs—and once you see them you won't be satisfied with just one plant—could be easily handled on a sunny part of the terrace. Just cut holes slightly smaller than the pots in a round piece of waterproof plywood, elevate it a few inches on short legs, and slip your pot plants in the holes. Or, you could convert a lazy-susan spice rack to hold your tiny treasures. This would make a fine centerpiece for a terrace table.

Ivy-leaved. Ivy geraniums, with their heavy, glossy green leaves and delicately fashioned flowers of lavender, pink and rose, are among the handsomest and least-known of the whole geranium clan. In the South and West they ha in lavish array from balconies a baskets. In the North they son times ramble over rocks and c cade down walls but, by and lar they are unknown to most peop If you have a light, airy place, j out of direct sun, ivy-leaved ge niums may be an ideal choice.

Lady Washington. In the Nort east and South, Lady or Mart Washington geraniums are al among the little known, in this ca because they bloom only when t temperature remains below 66 which means a very brief period the spring in a large part of t country. On the West Coast, ho ever, Lady Washington geraniu are among the most spectacul and popular of plants. Commerci growers ship them East for East and Mother's Day but unless y live in a similar climate, you probably not find them of use.

Scented. The renewed interest herbs has drawn attention anew the delights of a large group geraniums with scented leav Lemon, rose, apple, strawberr peppermint, orange and many ot ers are finding their way in jams, jellies, cold drinks, finge bowls, sachets and nosegays ju as they did many years ago.

Their delights are subtle, the flowers for the most part are insi nificant. But the pleasures th evolve are timeless.

Whether planted at an entran where you can't help but bru against them, or gathered togeth in one big display as were the p ted zonal geraniums on page 7 they'll be valued doubly for the unusual foliage.

The leaves of scented geranium are as different in shape as scent. Some are small and hear shaped, others are deeply lobed. few are lacy, and the leaves of or are like pieces of emerald plus You'll be delighted with the te tural patterns they make and wi soon be cutting them for foliag to accompany flowers or to us alone in an all-green study.

The best way to choose from th hundreds of geraniums available to see first the plants growing ou doors, preferably in your part the country. Reactions to climat varies considerably, so a variet which sulks in Massachusetts ma be a "knockout" on the West Coas If you have only standard vari es in your neighborhood, then ou'll do well to study an informa- ve catalog. Most geranium spe- alists are frank to say which of eir plants may be temperamental id which are so vigorous they n't help but grow.

Some varieties flower better than hers where sun is limited. The talog will give you an indication this, perhaps indirectly by say- g certain kinds make good pot ants or are preferred choices for inter house plants.

Culture

To get the husky, well-shaped, avy plants your garden needs, ep geraniums in constant growth. his means to give them the good il and moderate amounts of ater that you supply as a matter course to other plants.

If you grow geraniums in con- iners, make sure there is ample il to support the plants, because lowing the roots to be cramped lays flowering. Ordinary garden am to which a generous amount organic matter has been added quite satisfactory. Some growers d as much as 50 per cent peat.

If you know the soil is low in trients, mix in a complete plant od at the rates recommended on e package. Later you can use the me plant food for monthly appli- tions. If any of the essential nu- ents are lacking, flower buds velop slowly or not at all.

Geraniums don't wilt until some ne after the roots have failed to absorb enough moisture for the plant, so it's important to water geraniums as freely as you would the other plants in your garden, never letting the soil become dry. Lack of water, just like lack of plant food, will delay flowers and keep your plants from growing.

Geraniums, other than the Lady Washington type, will flower as long as you can keep them growing. This requires plenty of light as well as adequate water and food. Geraniums withstand freezing temperatures, but won't make any new growth when the temperature is below 50°. After a period of cool weather, the leaves become yellow- ish and red and may drop off.

When fall comes, you have a decision to make because, unless you have a flood of sunlight in a large south window, you'll find it a discouraging task to winter your geranium plants. They become sluggish, spindly and awkward in weak light and short days.

It's a better practice, if you want to hold over a few plants, to take 4-inch cuttings in September. Root them in vermiculite kept constantly moist, but not soggy, dipping them first in a fermate compound. Don't remove any of the leaves. The cut- tings may need shade from the direct sun at first, but after 3 or 4 days, they should be exposed to sunlight and kept at a minimum temperature of 60°. In about 3 weeks, when the roots are one inch long, they can be moved to the 3- or 4-inch pots in which they will spend the winter.

WHAT MAKES YOU FEEL HOT?

What is the optimum cure?

mplete air conditioning, which ves you control of the tempera- re and the humidity and the cir- lation of the air is the only way produce truly ideal comfort con- tions in hot weather. Whenever air cooled, humidity is kept within lerable limits as a result of the oling process, and with the more aborate air conditioners it can be gulated independently. With a od installation, air circulation is ntle, almost imperceptible, which the way you want it, since—once e temperature and humidity are w enough—you have no need of breeze to cool you off. And along ith control of the three factors hich influence your summer com- rt you get control of dust and llen, mildew, and outside noises a series of extra dividends.

7. How else can I beat the heat?

Remember that the amount of heat you produce within your body de- pends on how active you are. The problem of keeping cool under un- favorable circumstances is nothing more or less than the problem of getting rid of the heat we manu- facture inside ourselves. Hard phys- ical work in hot weather, especially if you are not accustomed to it, courts heat prostration. To remain healthy in hot weather stay as quiet as possible, wear light clothing, seek out a breeze, and, if you drink lots of water, replenish your salt supply. Contrary to popular notions, almost nothing you drink will actually cool you off, although you may think it does because drinking may "slow you up" and make you relax.

The warm glow from a handsome fireplace is so enjoyable on a winter evening! But this extra heat upsets the balance of ordinary temperature control systems and soon makes the rest of the house too cold. Only Zone Control, with its separate thermostat systems, assures even comfort all over the house.

Luxurious comfort all over the house with Honeywell Zone Control

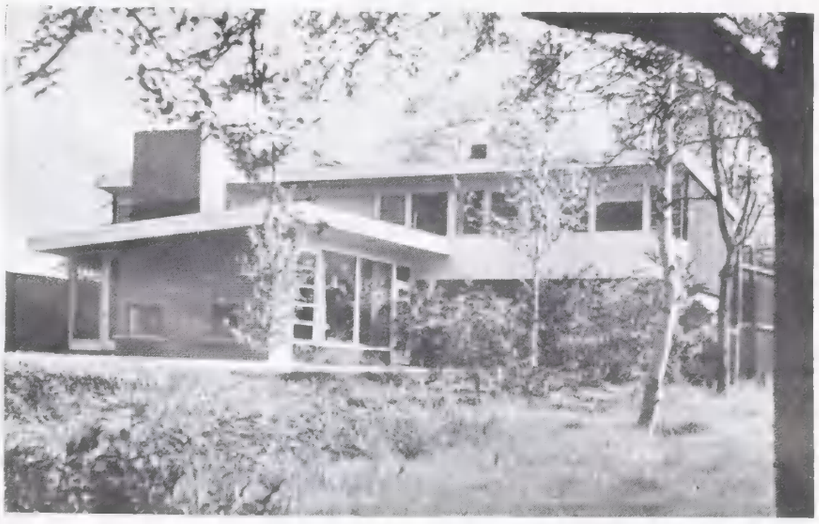
You need more than one thermostat to solve today's heating problems

THIS striking house illustrates how good planning can assure comfortable living in every one of your rooms. It's the new home of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Jaffe, Jr., of Shaker Heights, Ohio.

You can see the smart design . . . the spaciousness . . . the well-blended furnishings. But there's a wonderful innovation you can't see. It's the luxurious comfort all over the house from Honeywell Zone Control.

Cleveland architect Robert A. Little & Associates designed the house on two levels, and Mr. Little realized that no ordinary temperature control system would assure the kind of comfort the Jaffes wanted. "There are two distinct areas in this home — living-dining and service on the lower level, and sleeping on the upper. We definitely needed zone control," he says. "So we divided the house into two zones — each with a separate thermostat system."

Today, the Jaffe family and their guests enjoy even comfort in every part of the house. Honeywell Zone Control works with the heating system to provide this even comfort, all winter long, no matter how the weather varies.



So why don't you ask your architect, heating or plumbing contractor about Honeywell Zone Control? Enjoy luxurious comfort all over your house, too.

HONEYWELL CLOCK THERMOSTAT

Owners agree that the Honeywell Clock Thermostat assures wonderful, automatic comfort. It automatically turns down the heat at night for comfortable sleeping, and then turns it up while you're still asleep so you wake up in a nice warm house. It saves on fuel bills, too!

The exposure and use of this house calls for two zones, each with an individual thermostat system. Zone 1 covers the living-dining and service areas, and compensates for the fireplace effect and for the large south living room windows. The thermostat for Zone 2 controls the upstairs sleeping area.

Zone 2 is the place for wonderful sleeping! The independent temperature control here makes the bedrooms comfortably cool at night. And during the parts of the day when the upstairs is not used, Honeywell Zone Control makes it possible to maintain a lower temperature—and thus save fuel.

Only with Zone Control can you:

1. Remove wintertime chill from rooms with large glass areas—without overheating the rest of the house.

2. Maintain special areas of your home (bedrooms are a good example) at low, fuel-saving temperatures when they're not in use—without underheating living areas.

How to zone your home

Chances are your living habits may be quite different from the Jaffes'. So your zoning requirements for even comfort may be different, too. Here are four steps to follow: (1) Analyze your family program to determine how you use your rooms. (2) Review the north-south exposures of your home. Try to have one thermostat compensate for north winds, a second for southern sun. (3) Seriously consider making the bedroom area a separate zone — to provide for cool sleeping. (4) Consult your architect or heating dealer.

Send for our FREE booklet, "Plan to enjoy more comfort in more of your home." It tells why Zone Control is needed in homes with glass walls, fireplaces, one-story construction and other modern home characteristics.

DEEP-ETCHED NYLON

upholstery fabric

Now wonderful nylon is as marvelous to look at as it is to live with! A new kind of weaving gives it deep, deep texture—makes possible patterns never achieved in nylon before! And this deep etching gives colors a richness and depth that is really striking.

Finally, because these Candalon fabrics are pure nylon, they are the most practical fabrics made! They are miraculously long-wearing. They are stain-resistant and soil-resistant. They are completely washable with plain soap and water. And they are completely moth-repellent—for life.

These Deep-Etched Nylons are just one example of the kind of value you find in Candalon upholstery fabrics. Good reason to look for the Candalon label when you buy!

Here's my back-door bath for our family of mudlarks

EVER SINCE Jimmy—our third—was born, I'd been trying to get Roy to go along with my idea of a back-door bathroom. I wanted it as a clean-up spot for the children so they wouldn't track dirt all through the house. Three trails of muddy footprints and six piles of sand from emptied sneakers was something I couldn't face. But somehow Roy couldn't quite see my side of the problem.

Then, a few weeks ago, I went to visit Mother for a few days—and Roy stayed home to look after the children. Poor Roy! I'll never forget the harassed look on his face when I got back. It was showery weather, and the children had been in and out all day with their wet, muddy boots.

Well, that's all it took to get my "mud bath." We sat down and planned it that very evening. I suggested that we could use it as a powder room, too, but Roy was doubtful. If we needed a practical room, he said, we'd better forget about "prettying it up." For one thing we'd never get a floor that could take the beating this one was going to get, and still look right for guests.

I had to agree with Roy—that is, until I discovered Armstrong's Linotile. I'd never have dreamed such a beautiful floor could be so tough. Even the grit the children tracked in hasn't damaged the surface. With three lively youngsters to look after, I just don't have time to give it a lot of attention, yet the floor simply gleams when I whisk over it with a broom or a damp cloth. You can see for yourself what a lovely powder-room floor it makes, and that smart custom design cost us very little extra.

Roy's just as happy about my new Linotile Floor as I am. He looks at it from the money angle—keeps telling all our friends what a wonderful long-term investment Armstrong's Linotile is. As far as I'm concerned, it has paid for itself already!

Dirt's no problem in this bathroom, because the floor is Armstrong's Linotile, the easiest to clean of all Armstrong's resilient floors. Don't confuse Linotile with linoleum cut into blocks. Different processing makes this exclusive Armstrong Floor much tougher, more durable. Because of Linotile's resilience and extra density, it has over twice the indentation resistance of linoleum, eight times that of asphalt tile.

Send post card for free booklet. It gives you complete information about Armstrong's Linotile and shows the full range of handsome colors available. Free sketch plan for this bathroom included. Write Armstrong Cork Company, Floor Division, 5409 Atkins Ave., Lancaster, Pa.

NOW— a thermostat in every room

REVOLUTIONARY NEW HEATING SYSTEM makes individual temperature control of each room economical and practical

Here is the ultimate in heating comfort. With the Iron Fireman SelecTemp system you have a compact heating unit with its own individual thermostat in every room, including bathrooms.

Continuous modulated heat. Every room unit automatically modulates its heat output, maintaining a continuous flow of filtered warm air. The overheating and underheating usually experienced with "On-Off" thermostat control is entirely eliminated.

No electric wiring. The same low pressure steam which carries heat to each room unit from a central gas, oil or coal fired boiler operates a steam turbine-driven fan which quietly circulates the warm air. No electricity is required to operate either the thermostats or the circulating fans.

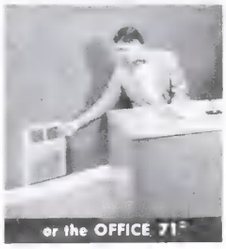
For new or old buildings. No other heating system can be so easily and economically installed in either old or new homes or buildings, since flexible copper tubing—smaller than your little finger—carries steam to the individual room heater units.

PERSONALIZED warmth—for work, for play, for rest

Since each room has its own thermostat, you can select the exact temperature you prefer—for any room —at any time. Like most people, you'll probably prefer a different temperature in the kitchen than in the living room or the bathrooms. Possibly you'll want to increase the temperature of a child's room temporarily with no worry about his getting uncovered. Even grandmother's room is no problem. Every room in your home or building has its own ideal climate!

Compact room heaters, only 18 inches high, are recessed into walls, with only grille projecting. Can be painted to fit any color scheme. Three sizes: 6,000; 12,000; and 18,000 Btu. 12,000 Btu. size shown above.

With SelecTemp, every room is an individual zone. Room units, each with its own built-in thermostat, are recessed into the walls. The temperature you select for your living room (or any other room) will be maintained regardless of other heat sources. Fireplace heat or sun warmth through the windows cannot overheat the room. The living room heating unit will automatically reduce its heat output to maintain the temperature for which it is set, while the rooms upstairs, or on the cold side of the house, will get all the heat required to keep each of them at the temperature you have selected. Air circulation is continuous.



Even bathrooms have their own individual heat control. You can keep them warmer than bedrooms. If you want a little extra warmth while bathing, all you have to do is set the thermostat for a higher temperature.

Bedrooms can be comfortably cool at night or during daytime nap periods, while other rooms remain warmer. To save fuel, you can also keep temporarily unused rooms cool, and warm them again in a few minutes.

Grandmother's room or the nursery can be warmed to any temperature desired, without affecting any other room in the house. SelecTemp room units respond very quickly to any change in thermostat setting.

Tenants and employees can regulate temperature to suit themselves without disturbing other offices. Iron Fireman SelecTemp heating is ideal for office buildings, hotels, motels, apartments, hospitals and schools.

Before you decide on any heating system, get the facts about SelecTemp

With all its unique advantages, an Iron Fireman SelecTemp heating plant costs no more than many systems which have only one thermostat for the whole house. In addition to unequalled comfort, it saves fuel by eliminating wasteful unnecessary heating and overheating. Thousands of people are now enjoying the comfort and economy of SelecTemp heating. You owe it to yourself to get full information.

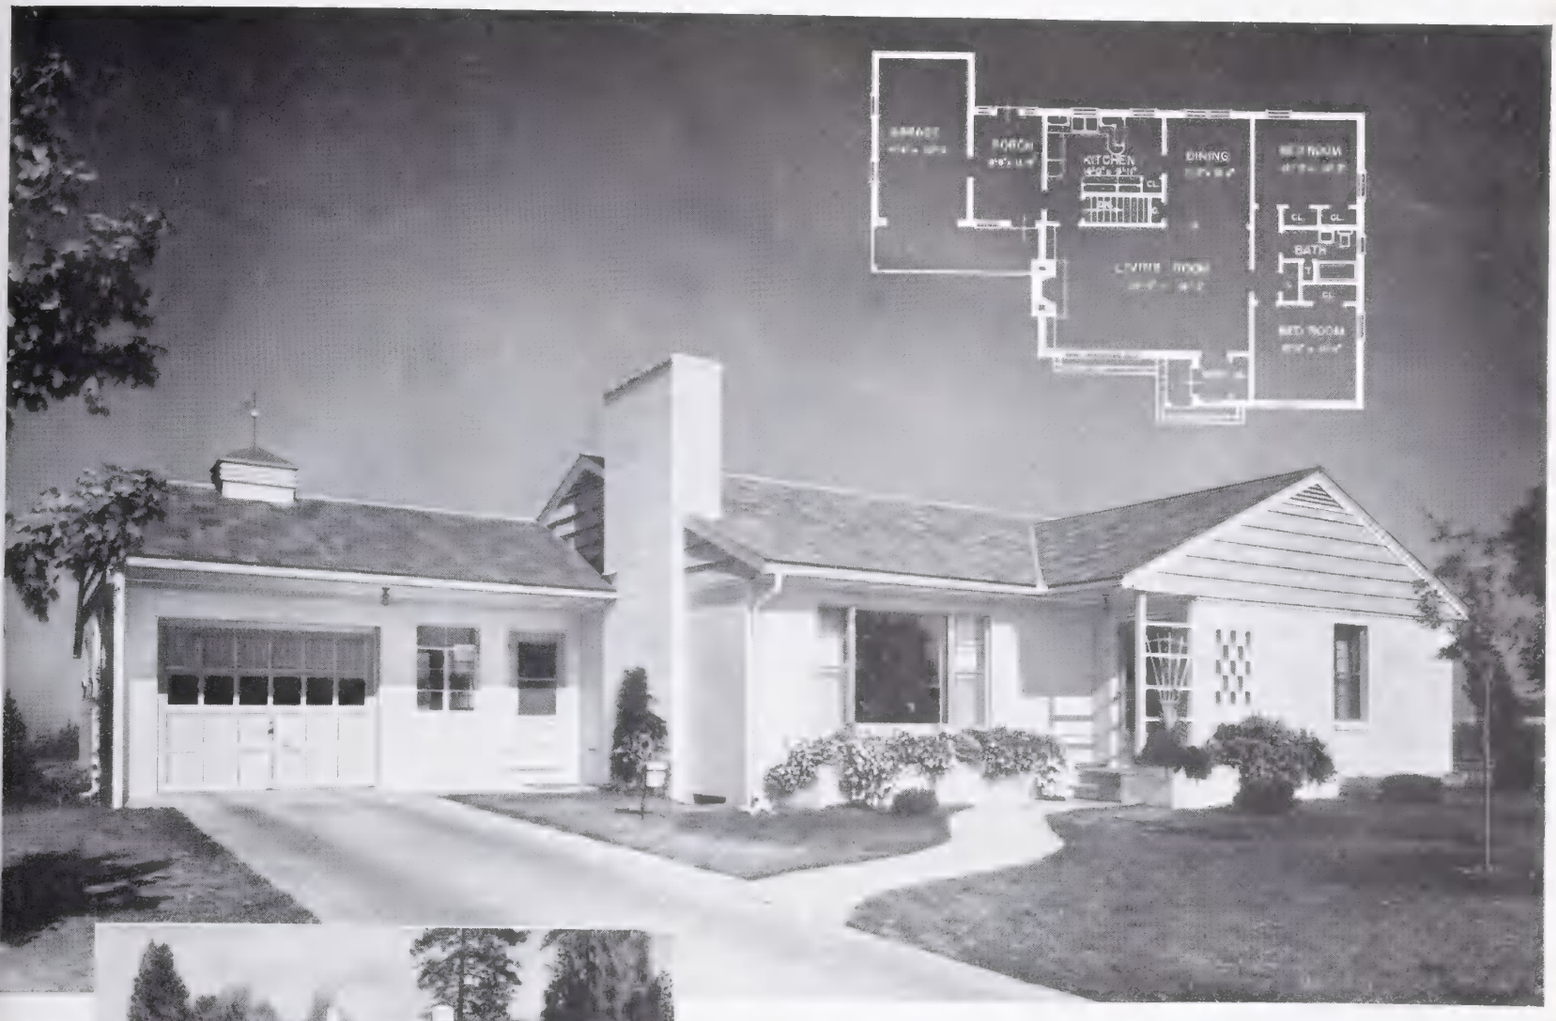
DRAWING BY NYDORF

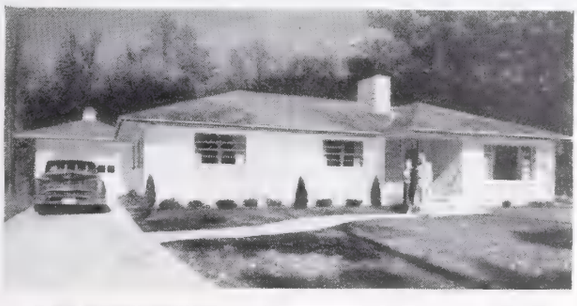
Your child's own movie-making

By CECILE STARR



PARENTS often brag about the movies they take of their children, but have you heard about today's child who makes his own motion pictures? My introduction to the subject was recent: A friend mentioned that her eleven-year-old son Pete had taken some fine movie shots of Navy airplanes in action during a recent week end in Washington, D.C.

Of course, it doesn't "just happen" that a mere boy starts making movies. So how did Pete get started with a movie camera? What have the results been? I asked my friend a lot of questions. Some of her answers are interesting enough to pass on to other bright-eyed parents, and even to non-parents who are planning short or long travels with youngsters.



First, the results: Pete's movie-making, in terms of picture quality and continuity, aren't anything to brag about. Even his mother doesn't praise them over much. "But," she says, "they are his own, and you can bet that he's going to show them with pride to all his friends." Mainly it gives Pete a chance to cultivate his own interests. Right now he is keen on airplanes. When the family is on vacation, or on a week-end jaunt, the movie camera helps remind everyone that Pete isn't interested in ordinary tourist sights and scenery. Like other boys of his age, he gets restless when there is nothing to do but sit in the car. So his family makes a point of including as many stops as possible at airfields in the vicinity. The movies Pete makes are a way of centering his attention on this interest, capturing the experience and taking it home with him. They are also tangible evidence that his interests count in the family setting. After all, an eleven-year-old is more than a piece of baggage.

And how did the movie-making get started? It began last summer when he was ten. The family were at their lakeside cottage in upstate New York. No one remembers what the occasion was, but somehow or other Pete managed to get the movie camera out of his father's hands and with a few instructions aimed the camera and pushed the right gadget. When the films were developed, Pete was pretty excited about his shots of kids in sailboats and canoes, in the water and on the diving board.

The camera is an 8mm one which the family bought several years before. It has been used mainly for holiday occasions, summers at the lake and year round sight-seeing trips. There is nothing special about it, except (Please turn to page 199)

More for your money in a CONCRETE HOUSE

Before you build or buy a house—wherever it may be, whatever size or style it is—compare basic construction materials. You'll find you get more for your money when your house has concrete foundations and floors, concrete masonry walls and a firesafe roof.

You get durability and protection. Concrete has maximum resistance to weathering. It can't burn, decay or be damaged by termites and vermin. A properly designed basement and concrete first floor provides a safe refuge from tornadoes, hurricanes and atomic blasts.

You get beauty. Choose from many distinctive concrete masonry wall patterns. Finish in beautiful color with portland cement paint.

You get comfort. With ordinary insulation a concrete house is cool in summer and warm in winter. It's snug and dry the year around.

You get economy. A sturdy, durable concrete masonry house will need less repair and maintenance. So its moderate first cost + its low maintenance cost ÷ its long years of service = low annual cost.

HOW TO GET A CONCRETE HOUSE—and what will it cost?

Phone a concrete masonry manufacturer for names of architects, builders and lending agencies experienced in concrete house design, construction and financing. They know conditions in your community and can tell you about plans, local requirements and costs.

Take any plans or sketches you have to an architect. Have him show you how your home—of any size, style or floor plan—can be economically built with concrete walls, floors and a firesafe roof. If you're not yet ready to build, write for a free, illustrated booklet, distributed only in the United States and Canada. Address Dept. 9-19.

Lighten your rooms, lighten your work with Gold Seal Vinyl Inlaids in

Bermuda Hues

Cleaning a Gold Seal VinylTile floor is as easy as dusting the furniture. Its surface is smooth and non-porous with a high resistance to grease, acids, alkalis—why, even harsh drain cleaners won't hurt it. That's why these light, lovely "Bermuda Hues" are perfectly practical in the kitchen; they're even practical over ongrade concrete, with or without radiant heating. Yet for enough resilient, inlaid Gold Seal VinylTile to cover a 9′ x 12′ room, you pay only about $38

The last word in counter tops takes its cue from the same smart "Bermuda Hues" you see on the floor and wall. (All colors are coordinated.) But Gold Seal VinylTop does more than look handsome. It's quiet—kind to your nerves and your dishes. It's so flexible, counter and splashboard can form one seamless piece. Yet Gold Seal VinylTop costs much less than hard, clattery tops. See your Gold Seal dealer for both VinylTop and VinylTile.

Records we'll play on a trip to the moon in 1979

Here our well-known music critic discusses records that might be collectors' items 25 years from now. Among his choices you will find such recordings as:

- Toscanini conducting Falstaff and the Grand Canyon Suite
- Oistrakh, Sr. and Jr., playing Khatchaturian's Violin Concerto
- Heifetz playing both violins in Bach's Double Violin Concerto
- Benny Goodman's Carnegie Hall Jazz Concert
- Horowitz's 25th Anniversary Recital
- Poulet, Jr., playing a Mozart concerto conducted by Poulet, Sr.
- The singing of Ljuba Welitch, Maria Callas, Traubel, Christoff and many others

I am sure, by the next to generation as proof that the in between didn't properly ap- iate this titan. What I am nating is that the enormous ct for him, as of now, will tably be whittled down by the nsayers of tomorrow, since they didn't contribute to that respect. When the tendency goes the other way, as it certainly must, the collectors will be seeking out the smallest manifestation of his abilities to chink in the complete structure.

I dare say the case of the two Oistrakhs will fascinate the unbelievers, when Igor is fifty-odd and papa a venerable seventy-nine.

They could then be the envy of this generation which lacks similar perspective on the abilities of the Kubeliks, father and son. You can, if you wish, now obtain versions by Oistrakh senior and junior of the same Khatchaturian violin concerto (Colosseum and Mercury), something which I doubt can be said of any other musical feat in the literature. This doesn't make the Khatchaturian a better piece, but it might establish young Oistrakh as a more persuasive fiddler than even his father. At least the

"How Can a Dust Cloth Cost $2?"

The lady is talking about us. We're the pirates who've put a two-dollar price on an ordinary-looking dust cloth, just 12 x 18 inches in size.

But our conscience is perfectly clear! We sleep well at night. When you have put into a dust cloth what we have, you can ask twice $2. When you've saved a housewife hours of cleaning time every week of her life (and when your product contains high-cost ingredients!) then you can practically name your own price. Our price is $2.

KEEPS DIRT FROM CLINGING

This Conniver Cloth of ours—and we are the only ones in the world who sell it—is guaranteed to keep dust and dirt from clinging, for days at a time, to any surface it touches! You simply touch it on woodwork, furniture, venetian blinds—any surface of wood, metal, paint, enamel, glass or porcelain. It applies a tough but invisible film that just won't tolerate dust, dirt or grime. This glass-like film is transparent. You can't see it or feel it. It doesn't hide, discolor or change the appearance of the finish it covers. Instead, it brings out and enhances the original beauty and lustre.

The secret that makes our Conniver Cloth behave as it does is something science calls "Silicone". Our Conniver is permanently impregnated with the stuff. Silicone is the 20th Century scientific wonder child. Reader's Digest has raved about it. Big industry has used it to save hundreds of thousands of dollars in cleaning bills—and enough man hours to make a union delegate wince!

WASH IT LIKE A PAIR OF NYLONS

You'll use Conniver a dozen times each day, on all sorts of surfaces. And so it will become soiled and discolored. Don't give it a thought! The miracle Silicone stays right in, keeps right on working for you—it's there for keeps! And if you want to wash Conniver, just dunk it in a detergent solution as you would a pair of nylons. It will come up smiling.

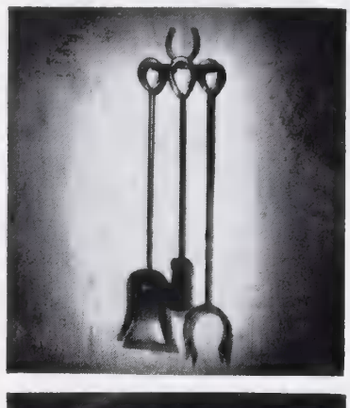
KEEP IT AWAY FROM YOUR HUSBAND

Just a word of warning. Don't let your husband get hold of Conniver. He will instantly carry it off for use on the car—and you'll probably never see it again! It will, of course, keep road dirt from sticking and cut down on his car washing. And probably make him even lazier than he is now, for he'll wash the car with just a wipe! He may even steal Conniver to use on his guns or golf clubs. Because using it steadily will prevent rust—and make it lots easier to remove grass stains, powder deposits and such.

PEOPLE SEEM TO LIKE IT

We've talked about Conniver all over. In magazines like House Beautiful, House & Garden, American Home and such. And in newspapers. We've sold Conniver to folks in every state. They like it. Lots of them have written to tell us so. They even say that they wouldn't ever want to be without it again, now that they've seen how much easier it makes all sorts of work.

WE AREN'T AFRAID TO GUARANTEE IT UP TO THE HILT



To show you that we respect two dollars just as much as you do, we make this offer—IF Conniver doesn't do everything we said it would, you keep it at no cost to you! We'll send your two dollars back whenever you write us and ask us to. And this Guarantee doesn't have strings attached—we're willing to let you be the judge!

We sell Conniver in two sizes. The standard 12 x 18-inch Conniver is $2.00 (or three for $5.00). And the deluxe double-size 18 x 24-inch Conniver is $3.50 (or three for $9.00). We pay postage, but can't accept COD orders.

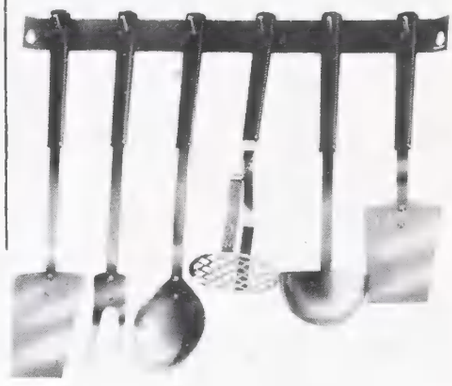
"Will You Accept a FREE GIFT FROM ME?

Just to Look at the Biggest Bargain I've Seen in Years!"

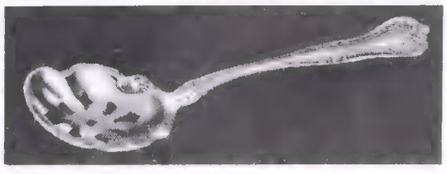
"If you like pleasant surprises — then you will certainly enjoy this one!

I am in the final process of conducting a national consumer test with our club members on the Handy-Chef seven-piece stainless steel kitchen set.



Our original supply was greatly oversubscribed by our members and 38% of those who received the set immediately ordered a second set, and it was necessary to make arrangements with the manufacturer in order to meet the demand. This is the greatest customer acceptance I have ever seen.

I think the reason is simple — the only set I have seen that even compares with this one retails for $13.95. By a direct plan with the manufacturer, our club members obtained this set for only $6.95 — and I can make you the same offer, plus a free silver jelly server which retails for $2.00 in open stock.



I am so sure that you will be pleased with the quality of this set that I am going to make an unheard-of offer. I want you to examine this set before you make up your mind — in other words — send no money until you have examined it in the privacy of your own home. Just fill out the enclosed coupon and mail it to me today. Then I will send you this set, at my expense, for you to see. After it arrives, examine it closely. If you agree with me, then send in only $6.95 — if you don't agree, send the set right back — and keep the dainty Queen Elizabeth jelly server as your free gift."

This is What You'll Say, Too —

"I am just wild about my set, because it is such a constant helper in the kitchen." You will know exactly what I mean when you receive yours. You will no longer have to rummage through kitchen drawers for the right tool — it will be hanging on the wall rack at your finger tips for instant use.

ACCEPT THIS FREE GIFT

This silver piece retails in open stock for $2.00 — but please accept this dainty jelly server as a free gift — whether you keep the Handy-Chef set or not. I want you to have it because once in each generation comes a pattern so beautifully proportioned, so exquisitely designed, so perfect in every last detail of artistry that the heart whispers, "this is mine." Such a pattern is Queen Elizabeth.

GUARANTEE

The manufacturer unconditionally guarantees this set not to rust, stain, or tarnish. The metal is mirror polished stainless steel — the handles are chip-proof, electronically fused to the shanks and can not come off. This is a lifetime set.

Dear Jo Ann:

Please send me the 7-piece Handy-Chef set and my free gift, the Queen Elizabeth jelly server — at no expense, for my examination. If I agree with you, I'll remit $6.95 within five days after I have received the set or I will return it. Regardless of my decision, the jelly server is my free gift and I am absolutely under no obligation.

Eenie meenie little man
Best school lunch comes in a can
Lunch meat · sausage · beef or ham
Sandwiches in seconds Ma'am!

Whisk a can of meat off your pantry shelf. Heat the meat and, presto, you have healthy, hearty, hot meat sandwiches on the table in seconds. Kids (and grownups) love them! Sandwiches made with canned meats provide children with the proteins that are so vital to growth.

Actually, canned foods are your biggest food bargain. Here's why: Cans* protect against waste and spoilage. Only the edible part of food is canned. There is no need for expensive refrigeration.

In addition, canned foods are tops in nutrition. Food is quickly canned at the peak of perfection to preserve perishable vitamins.

Enjoy the best . . . enjoy canned foods daily. Ask your grocer for a hot-sandwich recipe leaflet.

*"Tin cans" are actually about 99% steel

Now, a Sit-Down Sink! All the paring, peeling, stringing, sorting, slicing and washing of fruits and vegetables that you've had to stand for can now be done sitting down. This special, shallow sink, with its roomy recess for your knees, is St. Charles newest expression of better living in your kitchen.

LET'S DESIGN

YOURS...FASHIONED BY St. Charles

CUSTOM BUILT OF STEEL

The smartest kitchen designers in the world are: you and us. Your distinctive ideas for the perfect kitchen you want are just the right challenge to the styling skill of our St. Charles custom designers.

Notice how the Sherwood Green kitchen, above, created from one of our current 15 decorator colors and 2 wood exteriors, anticipates the new appliance color trend in an odd space situation.

Here St. Charles devised a unique dual sink peninsula combining new sit-down sink comfort with stand-up utility. Angled between 2 work areas—capped by an extension of clean, unbroken stretch of matching custom counter top—this peninsula puts the convenience of modern built-ins, the many special units and accessories within quick reach of both busy sinks.

The ensemble is dressed in a beautiful sweep of superbly finished steel—the lasting beauty and silenced strength of steel as only St. Charles can tailor it for you, after 19 years of suiting fine kitchens of steel to fine homes.

Call your St. Charles dealer today for practical advice about your new kitchen adventure with us. Confide in him—help him start planning. And invite his good sense about the best financing means for your investment.

in his hand

Wrap the big hand around the little hand . . . for now begins a little heart's journey into prayer . . . the guide is Dad, the goal is a security not even he can provide.

But the pattern is security, and it is Dad's privilege to supply his part of it for the little hearts in his care.

In this binding, enclosing love life finds its finest answer.

The security of our homes is our worthiest goal. And providing it is a privilege unique in a country like ours, where each of us is free to choose his way.

And, think: The security that begins in your home, joined to that of other homes, builds the strength of America.

Saving for security is easy! Here's a savings system that really works—the Payroll Savings Plan for investing in United States Savings Bonds.

This is all you do. Go to your company's pay office, choose the amount you want to save—a couple of dollars a payday, or as much as you wish. That money will be set aside for you before you even draw your pay. And automatically invested in Series "E" U.S. Savings Bonds which are turned over to you.

If you can save only $3.75 a week on the Plan, in 9 years and 8 months you will have $2,137.30.

U.S. Series "E" Savings Bonds earn interest at an average of 3% per year, compounded semiannually, when held to maturity! And they can go on earning interest for as long as 19 years and 8 months if you wish, giving you back 80% more than you put in!

For your sake, and your family's, too, how about signing up today? Or join the Bond-A-Month Plan where you bank.

It's a rare pleasure to find that the furniture you like best is the most practical, too. That pleasure is yours each time you choose pieces with genuine leather upholstery. Leather brings to your rooms the spirit of splendor and the loveliest colors you ever hoped for, yet it is the longest wearing, the least troublesome of all upholstery materials. Today, tomorrow, and always, genuine leather upholstery gives you the most value, the most style for your money!

Greater stitch strength means your genuine leather upholstery is much stronger along stitch lines, will not split as imitations do.

Leather is stronger! Almost any furniture is expected to take some pretty rough treatment at times. Genuine leather is far less likely to tear.

Leather resists heat best! Imitations soften under heat, absorbing grime and losing their shape. Leather breathes, staying more comfortable.

Leather stays bright! Junior cowpokes and other scratchy items just polish leather to an even brighter luster. Leather actually improves with age!

While with violinists, some attention should be directed to the case of J. Heifetz vs. J. Heifetz, as embodied in the Bach Concerto in D minor, for two violins (Victor). This mechanical miasma, in which the same Heifetz plays both parts, embodies more kinds of efforts than those which merely meet the ear. One has to project the attention beyond the immediate sounds and imagine the peerless virtuoso, imbued with the virtue of the idea that one man should play both parts, recording first one and then the other, in a kind of Narcissistic fascination with the sound of his own instrumental voice.

The moving finger writes, and having writ, moves on. But when what is writ is not, in the words of Keats, writ in water, but in a quavery line on tape or disc, in sound, time can be made to stand still. It can, for example, be made to stand still for the night of January 16, 1938, when Benny Goodman and friends played a jazz concert in Carnegie Hall (Columbia).

Ears unborn will listen to this, as others will to the remarkable demonstration of pianistic prowess by Vladimir Horowitz in the same place in February 1953 (Victor), or to the equally arresting (in a totally different way) demonstration by the South American Pianist Rosita Renard in still the same place on a much earlier date (SFM). They may well wonder why so fine a musician as Mme. Renard made no actual commercial discs during her lifetime, how such palpable gifts of taste and musicianship could have been overlooked. Well, 1979, we wonder just the same things in 1954.

Posterity can hardly accuse us (collectively) of being so remiss where the talents of the lamented Dinu Lipatti, Kathleen Ferrier, William Kapell, Ossy Renardy and Maria Cebotari are concerned. I don't think that any of these musicians attained the age of forty—in the case of Kapell, Renardy and Ferrier the terminal date would be closer to thirty. In another epoch, they would have been merely approaching the time when fame would have encouraged recordings. In ours, at least, they all have left something tangible to speak of uncommon abilities and unfulfilled promise.

In Renardy's case, the evidence embraces a range of recordings long and varied, amounting—for as much of life as was granted to him, with military service intervening—to a tonal autobiography. This points to another kind of collectors' item, embracing the same artist's efforts over an artistic career that might, as the disc evidence of Yehudi Menuhin's does, begin at the age of ten or twelve, with documentation almost yearly thereafter. Here the verbal gulf bearing upon change and development, influences and "periods," can be bolstered or refuted by durable evidence. Going back a few years, indeed, to the late acoustical period, one could compile the Heifetz Story in a form that would make the aforementioned Bach double violin concerto just a transitory happening. It would, indeed, embrace collaborations with many of the great conductors of the time—Toscanini, Koussevitzky, Beecham, Ormandy, Barbirolli and Goossens come to mind immediately—an array hardly duplicated by another instrumentalist. For that matter, the newest "new" Heifetz might be young Gerard Poulet, whose playing of a Mozart concerto (Remington) on a disc conducted by his father, Gaston, is an adventure in fresh, believable musicmaking not often encountered.

What is a collector's item depends, to some extent, on who is the collector. I know persons who dote on fluffs—the inadvertent and the unpredictable, of which one enterprising merchant has engineered a whole collection. Bird songs are a passion with others, including that Edgar Bergen of ornithology, the mocking bird, whose imitations of the legitimate cries of his brethren may be had for the asking (Cornell). At another extreme is the wishful singing of F. F. Jenkins, whose previously only privately circulated gaffes have come to universal attention on Victor.

Speaking for myself, I confess an interest in opera more compelling than most other things. With this in mind, I inquire: How much would it be worth to review the maiden effort of Olive Fremstad as Salome or Lillian Nordica as Brünnhilde in Götterdämmerung? Both of these are beyond us now, but we have at hand the almost equally earthshaking impact of Ljuba Welitch, with Fritz Reiner as tremblor counter, shortly after her notable debut at the Metropolitan on February 4, 1949. The long representative excerpt may be found on Columbia. As for the contemporary counterpart of Nordica, few things so well become Helen Traubel as the rocklike steadiness and lava-like flow of tone she evoked for the Immolation Scene under the probing baton of Arturo Toscanini, recollected on Victor.

I would certainly rate these as collectors' items, along with the series of Toscanini operas (eventually to be swelled, by Falstaff, and after that, perhaps by pared-down versions of his Aida and Fidelio, and the remarkable Rigoletto quartet with Peerce and Valentino, broadcast on that July afternoon of 1943 when Mussolini toppled from power). Of similar inevitable prominence are Reiner's Carmen with Risë Stevens (Victor) the fine Trovatore with Milanov, Bjoerling, and Warren (Victor) not to mention the English Così fan Tutte (Columbia) with Steber and Tucker, Thebom and Peters, which enjoys the unique status of being the first major Mozart opera to be recorded west of Ambrose Lightship.

At the other extreme are the otherwise obscure and unprominent, who have managed to commit some moment of glory to permanence. Legalistic problems have kept Boris Christoff away from us, physically, but there is no court that can deny the eloquence of his plea as Boris Godounov in Mussorgsky's opera (HMV). Also of peculiar eloquence in this music (though he did not make more than a passing impression when he sang at the City Center in New York) is Raphael Arie, whose art enriches London discs. Likewise beguiling to the ear are the talents of Irma Kolassi, a singer of no notable career who does magical things in songs of Ravel (London), and Felicia Blumenthal of Brazil, whose pianistic form in Spanish works of Soler, etc., invites a distinct curiosity about other sympathies.

In the area of the foregoing—vocal talents we have gathered to our bosom in inflexible vinylite when the actual beings have been denied to use—I could also mention Walther Ludwig, a tenor who sings many kinds of Germanic music persuasively, Effie Mayerhofer, who could be a press agent's invention were it not for the saucy Straussian expressions in her name, along with Dusan Georgevic, a lyric tenor whose rocket seems to be on the downward course, and Nicolai Gedda, whose arch is still upward. If history has some curiosity about the lung power of Mario Lanza, there are records to satisfy it, as there are also for the birdlike flight of Mado Robin, the bulldozer force of Maria Callas (as Lucia and Elvira in Angel's Puritani, Laura in Gioconda and Norma), the versatility of Elisabeth Schwarzkopf and the quiet charm of Bidu Sayao singing "O Mio Babbino Caro" from Puccini's Gianni Schicci.

If I have failed to record such momentous matters as Strauss and Stravinsky, Hindemith and Milhaud conducting their own works, I can only state that such services are the obvious responsibilities of major recording entities in any era, the fulfillment of them as obvious as some of the above enterprises are unique and special. I chose to think that people will be listening to Ansermet conducting Stravinsky, Bernstein conducting Stravinsky, Monteux, Stokowski and Fricsay conducting Stravinsky when Stravinsky conducting Stravinsky may narrow down to how he did the Ebony Concerto with Woody Herman's band. I may be wrong. But don't sue me: just wait for the September 1979 issue of House Beautiful. Is it a date?

I wondered what kind of illness she considered a "game." Then came enlightenment.

"Oh, you mean a patience table?"

"Yes," she said politely.

Straining to shift my sights, I turned back to the table. Casters on all four legs, I discovered. Well, why not a patient's table? Can't think of anything handier for an invalid who has to sit for several hours in one spot. Comfortable height for a tray or, with the leaf raised and a visitor for lunch, for two place settings. Likewise a good surface for reading, writing, stamp mounting or (all right) playing patience. Handy, even if you're not an invalid, come to think of it.

Mrs. Kingsbury has finally rebelled against the burden of keeping a seventeenth-century house in the style to which it is accustomed. For years everybody has been oohing and ahing over her little cottage in Redding with its antiques, documentary wallpapers and wide board floors. But the cracks between the boards, Mrs. Kingsbury decided this year, had been endured long enough.

"Maybe such carpeting isn't authentic," she said, "but I've made up my mind I'm going to cover every inch of every floor in the house."

She had figured on doing it one room at a time. But when I showed her the Mohawk sample that was my first choice, she decided she could swing the whole job this year. Price is under $7 a yard. It's a blend of wool and Durlon (Mohawk's own brand of viscose rayon) in a pattern that looks like irregular rows of thick round tufts. Counted up six different colors of yarn—bright green, brown, terra cotta, beige, blue and a deep pinky rose—that alternate in hit-or-miss streaks as in a rag rug. There's more of the beige than anything else, but the other five stand out or fade away depending on what else is in the room. Pays off two ways—the uninterrupted stretch of one kind of carpet makes the tiny house look larger from wherever you happen to be standing, but as you move from room to room it seems to change tone as the colors around it change. Like all multi-colored floor coverings it swallows up footprints and even tends to minimize the peaks and valleys in which those old floors abound. Has a homespun look that goes well with the antiques, too. Shouldn't be surprised if some wide-eyed visitor took it for one of Mrs. Kingsbury's triumphs in tracking down the authentic. "Royal Victory" is Mohawk's triumphant designation for the carpet quality, but the pattern is tamely labeled "RV 85."

Something that's always puzzled me: how the early Nineteenth Century could have produced such edifying architecture in America, and such dreadful furnishings. Greek Revival houses have been my synonym for romantic elegance ever since I was a child. But what is dumpier than American Empire furniture? Or more grotesque than the gilding, the bronzes, the tasseled hangings and pattern-splashed rugs that are supposed to go with it? I'll never die happy till I can get my fingers into a Greek Revival house and do it over the way I think it should have been done.

Big chance may come any day now. All depends on whether Mrs. Streeter's sister-in-law in Syracuse likes the wallpapers I sent her as a first tentative step toward reviving the downstairs rooms of her white porticoed house on James Street, built circa 1835. Personally, I don't see how they can miss.

Picked only two and both came from the Thomas Strahan collection of documentaries. Was specially delighted by the one I prescribed for the reception hall and the two parlors. Name is "Medallion" and the pattern is just that—three-inch medallions printed in metallic gold on a pure white ground and widely spaced, about six inches apart. No doubt about its elegance. But it's not in the least overpowering because it's so reserved. Repeating the same paper in all three rooms will do a lot to restore the feeling of spaciousness that I'm sure the house was meant to have.

For the dining room I sent up a fruit and vine pattern called "Talleyrand" reproduced from an old paper found in the Knox Memorial Mansion in Thomaston, Maine. Lafayette was supposed to have helped General Knox choose his furnishings, and judging by "Talleyrand" he did a good job. The design dates back somewhat earlier than the house in Syracuse. But styles didn't change as fast in those days, and the soft rounded drawing of the leaves and grapes is very much like those paintings on velvet by the young ladies of the 1820's and '30's. The motifs are large as life, so the design is going to seem quite bold when it covers all four walls of that dining room. But that is as it should be. The room is almost too large for the way most of us dine today and the wallpaper will cut it down to its proper size.

Documentary papers

Haven't decided exactly what kind of furniture I want to use against these backgrounds, if and when Mrs. Streeter gives me the assignment. But I have a hunch a good deal of it will be mid-Twentieth Century.

Found a dresser-desk at Baumritter that took care of Mrs. Proctor's guest-room plight very neatly. When she bought the cottage at Easthampton last spring, she was determined to make the guest rooms usable immediately, if only for sleeping. So I sent down studio beds, two for the larger rooms and one for the smaller. Both rooms seemed filled to capacity when the beds were moved in and were undeniably uninviting. Even the striped denim curtains and bedspreads didn't help very much. I tried to think of storage pieces that wouldn't look too cramped or too dinky-looking, but Mrs. Proctor continued to talk about dressing tables.

The dresser-desk settled the argument. It has three fairly good-size drawers—as much as even a couple need to hide their less esthetic week-end effects—with white drawer fronts, gold flecked. The rest of the piece has a mahogany finish and includes a pencil drawer and enough top surface for writing a letter or spreading out the works of a full-dress make-up. We ordered one for each room. The one in the double room has to go in front of the window but Mrs. Proctor has a little easel mirror she will place on top of it. Not the least appeal, I suspect, is the price of the piece—under $100.

Carved from mahogany

I am not especially fond of cats. (We simply ignore each other.) And I've exploded more than once over lamp bases made from figures, animal or human, with lighting fixtures planted in their heads. Won't even try to explain why the cat lamp I found at America House turned out to be the embarrassing exception. Simple fact is I liked it even if it did violate my prejudices. Mrs. Hanley who does like cats found it quite enchanting, and that was what mattered most.

A sculptor named Nimo carved the cat out of mahogany in a modern abstract style. But it is tall and slim like the sacred cats of Egypt, and similarly Sphinx-like, so it has considerable dignity. Took us a while to find a shade that didn't look as if it were supposed to be a hat for the cat. Finally discovered that a square one with rounded corners did the trick—probably because it repeats the square form of the base on which the cat is perched.

Nimo makes carved wood bases regularly for America House, I learned. Must remember to drop in and see what he's doing.

Add to list of new (but sensible) uses for antiques: an old pine wash stand, stripped down to the bare wood and waxed, as a cabinet for a hi-fi phonograph. A Victorian slate mantel mounted on a wall below a rather high window, as a make-up table. An old-fashioned dentist's instrument cabinet (about night-table size) stripped to its mahogany skin, for sterling flatware storage in a dining alcove. Spied all of them in Mrs. Vôichick's house in Philadelphia.

Smothering a room with fabric is a lazybones' way of creating an effect—or so I've often said. But that is exactly what I felt like doing when I came across "Blossom Drift" at Morton Sundour—a lovely, flowery print in grays and pure sky blue on sheer white batiste. It's because it is so ethereal, I suppose, that I felt I just couldn't get too much of it. Used it for draw curtains in Mrs. Dorman's bedroom along the whole end wall and half of the long wall. Made them triple width so there are lots and lots of folds even when the curtains are drawn.

But even that feast of yardage didn't satisfy my appetite, so I used "Blossom Drift" again for the bed skirt, under a fitted box spread of blue linen. Again I was lavish with the yardage, but I had the skirt made demountable for easy washing. Used the shirring tape that comes by the yard with built-in strings that you draw up and tuck out of sight, then loosen again when you want to flatten out the flounce for the laundress. The whole thing snaps onto the flat piece of muslin that goes between mattress and spring and doesn't even have to be removed unless you want it laundered, too.

Haven't heard any cracks so far from Mr. Dorman. If he doesn't feel smothered, I guess no one else will.—M. R.

By LOUISA M COMSTOCK

To enjoy life as the Italians do, you have only to visit them in the fall, when the summer heat has subsided, the lusty autumn festivals and big trade fairs are in full swing, and the Italians themselves are heading back home for the opening of the opera season at La Scala or San Carlo.

The practical advantages of such timing are many. Thrift Season rates apply on some steamship lines as early as August, and on the airlines November 1. Hotels, trains, buses and individuals, relieved of the final summer tour party, are ready to give you better service, and some hotels, particularly in the Mediterranean resorts, go on reduced off-season rates. But besides being kind to your pocketbook, a fall visit gives you the chance to see things you couldn't see at any other time.

This year in Milan, from August 28 through November 15, you can visit the Triennale, a wonderfully varied exhibition of the best of Europe's home furnishings design, which occurs every three years. Concurrently, there will be an exhibition of landscape gardening in the gardens of the Art Palace, where the Triennale is held.

Naples in late September puts on its tremendous festa of San Gennaro, which starts out with a religious miracle and ends with parades and dancing in streets knee-high in confetti and tinsel. Ravello, on the romantic Amalfi coast, puts on its traditional Wine Festival. And, of course, there's nothing like Rome in the fall, when the aroma of café espresso and roasting chestnuts fills the cool air and Roman thoughts turn to food. But anywhere you go in Italy, food can mean three festas a day for the gastronome.

Incidentally, now, before you leave home, you can buy a book of dinner tickets from your travel agent which will expedite your dining at some of Italy's finest restaurants, saving you problems of exchange and that old question, "Where shall we eat?"

For a sensitive, philosophic appraisal of this diverse land, read Sean O'Faolin's two classics for travelers, Autumn in Italy, in which this perceptive Irishman reports on Southern Italy and Sicily, and Spring in Italy, the story of his love affair with Genoa, Venice, Florence, and Rome. "To one who has been long in city pent"—

Don't despair.

Life is full of problems.

But life is also full of solutions.

And out of the problem, no matter what it is, will come a solution that will surprise you with its freshness and its inventiveness—if only you approach your problem with fresh vision and inventive freedom.

This month we undertake to show you what to do about life in the city: how to face the renter's dilemma of "to improve or not to improve someone else's property," how to make a home out of an apartment or a town house, how to garden in spite of soot and grime, how to achieve distinction in rooms that are distinctly undistinguished.

If you're full of problems, we're full of solutions—

The Renter's Dilemma

—to give character to characterless rooms

—to add architectural interest to dull, boxy spaces —to "build-in" things, yet be able to take them away

—to decorate a standard apartment so your home is not like a million others

The renter's furnishing problems are much greater than those of a homeowner. For the renter has less to begin with in interesting floor plan and architecture. Because renters feel their situation is temporary, they hate to commit themselves to important expenditures for fear they will be of short-term value.

But all the dilemmas and handicaps can be overcome, if attacked frontally with an open mind and with a positive instead of a negative point of view. Twenty-eight pages in this issue show what others have done. If they can do it, so can you.

Here are the principles you will find illustrated throughout this issue. Read them now. Then come back to them after you've studied what others have done.

1. Don't buy nondescript furniture, because you "don't know where you're moving next and it must do wherever you move." There is furniture that has distinction and also can go wherever you go, working well in either living room or bedroom or dining room. (See such an example on pages 132 and 133.)

2. Turn awkward posts, beams and jogs to advantage. Use them for interesting reveals, niches for cabinetry or unusual furniture groupings. Look with fresh eyes at your rooms and try to see fresh solutions. (See an example on page 160.)

3. Do everything you can to relieve the flat, shadowless boxiness of your rooms. Mirrors, wallpapers (such as scenics) that give the illusion of depth and dimension, moldings and dadoes are some of the devices to consider. Shelvings, counters and cabinets that look built-in (but are really free-standing) give the most architectural interest. Simple so-called built-ins can be made by any "finish carpenter," and painted to match surrounding walls. Make them in sections so they can move with you and be useful in your next home. The rooms on these six pages are from the exhibition "Metropolitan Living, 1954" created by the American Institute of Decorators in the Los Angeles apartment project known as "Parklabrea." It is open to the public till October 23, 1954, as a charity of the Junior League of Los Angeles.

The growing importance of TV and high-fidelity music systems offers the renter a wonderful chance. Use a custom cabinet, housing these entertainment devices, as the focal point of the room. Ask a decorator or designer to give this piece an architectural distinction.

Some architectural interest was added to this room by storage shelves flanking the windows, and a plant box running between in front of the glass. Thus a window reveal was created, whose exposed sides were mirrored, adding to the width. Draperies really cover the storage shelves—not windows. Thus double benefits were achieved: new storage, architectural quality.

Another example of how a big, custom cabinet serves as focal point of a living room. It has good scale and gathers into one important piece the functions of TV, record-player and radio, and service bar. Closed, it has architectural quality. Also notice original way shell lanterns were hung over big coffee table by running electrical conduit across ceiling and obscuring it with the whimsey of painted tree branches. Such gay, unconventional touches are invaluable to apartment dwellers.

Here's how to make a standard-size apartment window look like a floor-to-ceiling one. The textured shadows of the shutters are interesting in themselves, and the whole element turns into a spot of architectural interest, which the room needed. A perfect example of how a little imagination can turn a dull, stock situation into something far more interesting.

Television viewing was made axis of furniture arrangement in this living room, three sides of which are shown here. Custom cabinet which houses screen and "hi-fi" equipment was papered in grass-cloth to match walls, so it looks built-in. Actually it is free-standing. Clever detailing of "TV doors," in relation to wood slat blind and seating, rerouted traffic pattern from foyer to bedrooms. Seating was brought closer together for better TV viewing.

Wooden pilasters (2″ x 6″) frame these quite average windows. Woven wood blinds, roller type, travel between them. These two tall elements increase the optical height of the room, give it added dignity. Window openings are best starting points to improve architectural interest.

The apartment on these two pages, done by a very knowing decorator, demonstrates beautifully all the seven principles listed on pages 112 and 211. Florence Bates Hayward is a master at bringing together beautiful "things" to help make a home you are proud to come back to. In the scene above, note the effective scale: Sofa is 12½ feet long; coffee table is eight feet.

Mirroring a whole wall is another sure-fire principle for curing the smallness of apartment rooms. The use of a bleached Spanish chest is an example of the non-stereotyped way of furnishing. The hand-woven draperies by Maria Kipp illustrate the point about richness. Color scheme of large areas is neutral: white and beige, thus focusing attention on outstanding pieces.

FLORENCE BATES HAYWARD, DECORATOR

The dining table is an example of how Mrs. Hayward gets individuality. Table top and legs are antique English oak, bleached. But carved stretcher panels between legs are new, specially designed and executed by Mrs. Hayward. Result: a non-stereotyped table that does not look dining-roomish and has fresh personality. Note the bigness and simplicity of all accessories.

Bedroom has a mirrored wall behind the beds, doubling the spaciousness. This illusion is intensified by a serene color scheme of sea-green walls and ceiling, a green carpet and all other materials in white. A small hand-painted wallpaper mural by Robert Crowder adds the note of richness and the quality of being different which apartment rooms need so badly.

How to get character in one room

By MARION GOUGH

In all the distinguished apartments we are showing in this issue, one significant quality sings out. It is the air of permanence and proprietorship which results when a tenant treats his rented quarters with the thoroughness and completeness of a homeowner. You feel in these rooms none of that sense of transience which afflicts so many tenants, none of that awful willingness to live in average adequacy rather than improve the landlord's investment.

Obviously, the businessman tenant of this one-room apartment believes that a man's home is his castle no matter where it is, or he would not have engaged decorator John Greer to help him cope with the problem of cramming living, dining, sleeping and entertaining facilities into a 13½′ x 15′ area. Since practically everything here has of necessity to do double duty, it was worth it to him to have some of his furniture specially designed—the sofas for instance, which are also beds, and the hook-shape island desk which is also buffet and dining table. Since they were styled for their purpose, there is no look of makeshift about them. Storage chests are placed along the walls like custom-made built-ins, saving floor space and giving architectural interest. Notice that everything, from furniture to accessories, is substantially scaled and a few pieces do all the work. Notice, too, that all this distinction is free-standing and movable and is, therefore, no gift to the landlord.

A major problem in a one-room apartment is to create a sense of spaciousness without sacrificing essential furnishings. Bookcases and storage chests, lining the walls like built-ins, conserve floor space and substitute for lamp tables.

This right-angled placement of two sofas usurps no more room than the usual hackneyed arrangement of one-sofa-and-two-chairs, yet provides two beds and more actual seating space.

Colors in this eighth-floor apartment increase the illusion of spaciousness. Pale blue and mossy green seem like an extension of sky and treetop colors seen through the windows.

New life was brought to this apartment, typical of those built in the twenties and thirties, by removing unnecessary partitions and doors, by decorating and lighting with drama and by complete air conditioning.

The second youth of a middle-aged apartment

How remodeling and air conditioning cured the obsolescence of a 20-year-old apartment

The life of an apartment-hunter is not an easy one. At least not in New York City. New apartments are very expensive. Old apartments are badly planned, badly lighted and badly ventilated, but at least they offer space.

In settling on an apartment of his own, decorator William Pahlmann decided on an old apartment, because of the room it offered and because of the possibilities he saw in it for remodeling and for the installation of complete air conditioning. Unlike many of the new apartments, too, it had a service entrance, a fair-sized kitchen and a servant's room with bathroom facilities.

Mr. Pahlmann had all these requirements in mind when he shopped for his apartment. The thorough renovation he undertook cost less than it might have, because of his practised eye and professional experience. He knew what could be removed easily (non-bearing partitions and French doors) and what was best left untouched (structural elements, such as beams and posts).

Four pages further on, both the before and after plans are shown, along with the scheme for air conditioning. (Please turn the page)

This is a new storage wall replacing former awkward partitions and French doors. It not only separates entry from living room, but also houses TV (facing living room) and high-fidelity music equipment. Picture frame serves as door pull. Note spot-light on top for lighting painting.

The occasional guest room (above) has an unusual and distinctive wall treatment: strip-oak flooring which gives this small room unexpected character and freshness. Touches such as this completely lifted an old apartment out of the class of the standard and the ordinary and gave it personality.

The before and after plans (on page 125) are worth very close study by anyone planning remodeling and reconditioning. Note what was done, first of all, with the useless entry hall, immediately left of the dining room in the before plan. Partitions separating it from the dining room were removed and its space added to the latter. (This more than compensated for the thin slice taken from the dining room for part of the air-conditioning equipment.) Similarly, French doors and partitions separating the dining room from the living room were taken away and both rooms opened up to a longer vista.

However, in order to make some separation between entry and living room, a storage wall was built between them. This new wall houses a TV set, a radio-phonograph high-fidelity system and many records. (There are two photographs of the storage wall directly above, showing it open and closed.)

To add storage facilities to the master bedroom, the partition between the two bedrooms was removed and a storage wall erected in its stead with some space borrowed from the less-used guest room. These changes plus the air-conditioning installation, whose story is told separately overleaf, were the major revisions in the floor plan. (The average renter, of course, should seek professional advice on whether an old apartment can be remodeled and, if so, at what cost.)

In addition, decorator Pahlmann brought new life and character here by redoing the fireplace wall, by dramatic and generally increased lighting, by using such fresh ideas as paneling a wall with oak flooring and by freely and personally mixing furniture and accessories of many countries and many periods.

The walls on this side of the master bedroom were left structurally the same. The one opposite (see below) was made into a storage wall. However, a sense of rejuvenation was achieved even here by means of harmonious furnishings, fabrics and colors. Often an apartment can be "remodeled," in feeling at least, by such means.

An "impossible" place was found for a dresser that had no wall space available for it. Result: a useful, excellent solution.

The storage wall below, shown open and closed, took the place of the former partition-wall between master bedroom and guest room. The necessary additional space for clothes closets was borrowed from the only occasionally used guest room. Besides providing useful storage, the new wall also adds architectural interest.

The second youth of a middle-aged apartment

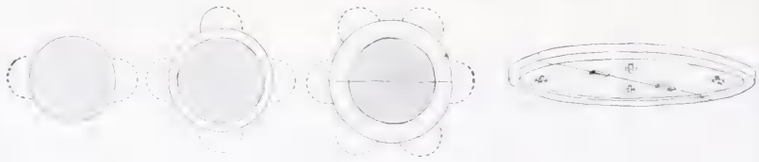
Removing the partitions that separated the dining room from the entry hall and living room created a two-faceted problem familiar to many: (1) people now enter the dining room directly from the door and (2) the dining room is always visible from the living room.

Mr. Pahlmann solved this dilemma by furnishing the new dining room with a small antique table and by designing two table-tops to increase the possibilities for seating guests. Normally, when you enter, you see this handsome but unobtrusive table with two chairs casually drawn up to it. Then it is set for two, for four or for six, depending on which of the two table-tops is used.



After dinner, the table is cleared and the top removed; and the dining room neatly reverts to being a little salon, so far as its appearance and use are concerned. This solution might be used wherever the problem is similar.

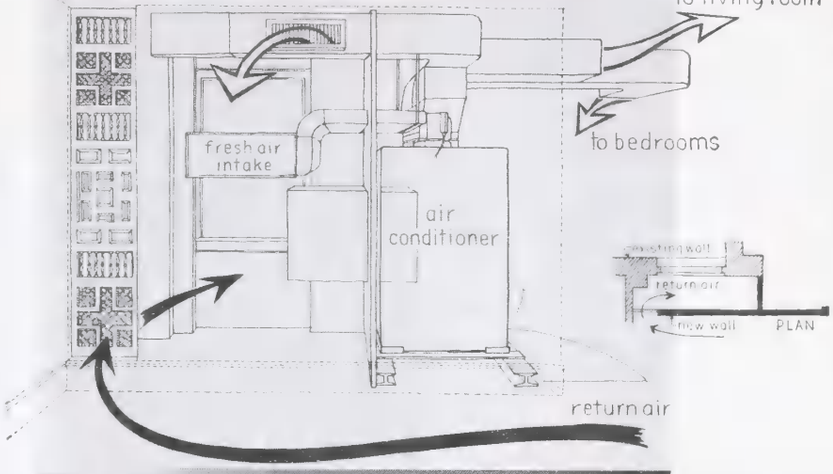
Basic table for two. Added table top for four. Folding table top for six. Folding top is 5′ across, secured by turnbuckles.



Here is a clever solution for increasing the size of a round table. Designed by William Pahlmann, the two table tops (above) can increase seating from two to six. Smaller cover is 4 feet in diameter and costs $132 (because of hand marbleizing and lacquering). The larger is 5 feet and costs $68 (simply spray-painted). They can be secured to the original table top by turnbuckles on the under side.

Central air conditioning was the hub around which this remodeling revolved Pahlmann selected his apartment with air conditioning in mind, and planned its remodeling around a central cooling unit serving all of the rooms. By combining an awkward, old-fashioned foyer with the dining room, he was able to enlarge the dining space while taking a couple of feet off one side to provide needed room for the air conditioner. At the same time, this change eliminated a series of useless doorways and enabled him to cover an unattractive window which opened on a gloomy court and use it as the fresh-air inlet.

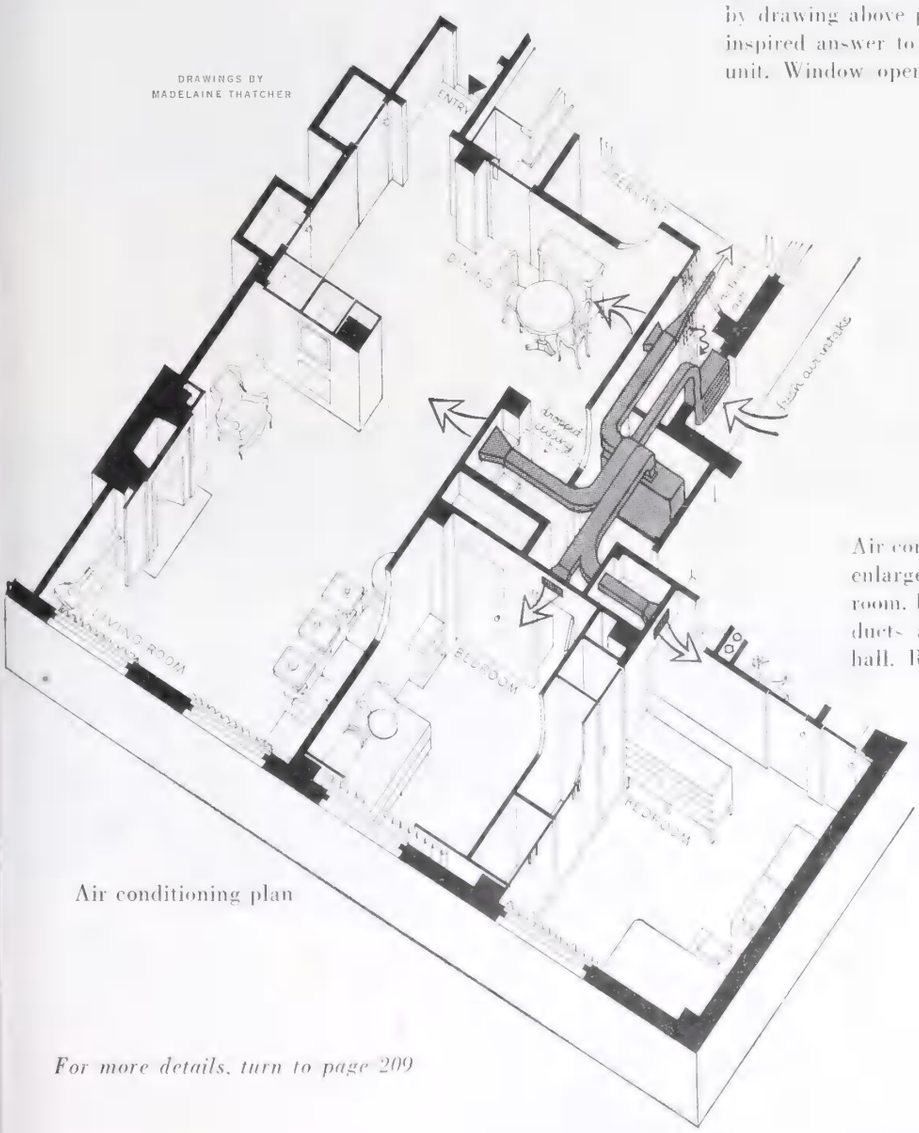
The air conditioner he chose is a water-cooled "package unit" by Carrier with three tons refrigeration capacity. This is more than adequate to handle the "load," even for lavish hot-weather entertainment. Conditioned air is distributed to the main rooms through ductwork above a new, "dropped ceiling" in the hallway, with outlet grilles taking the place of transoms. A duct extends through the servant's room to the kitchen.



Costs for adding central air conditioning run from $600 to $700 per ton of refrigeration capacity, plus construction costs for ductwork and changes in walls.

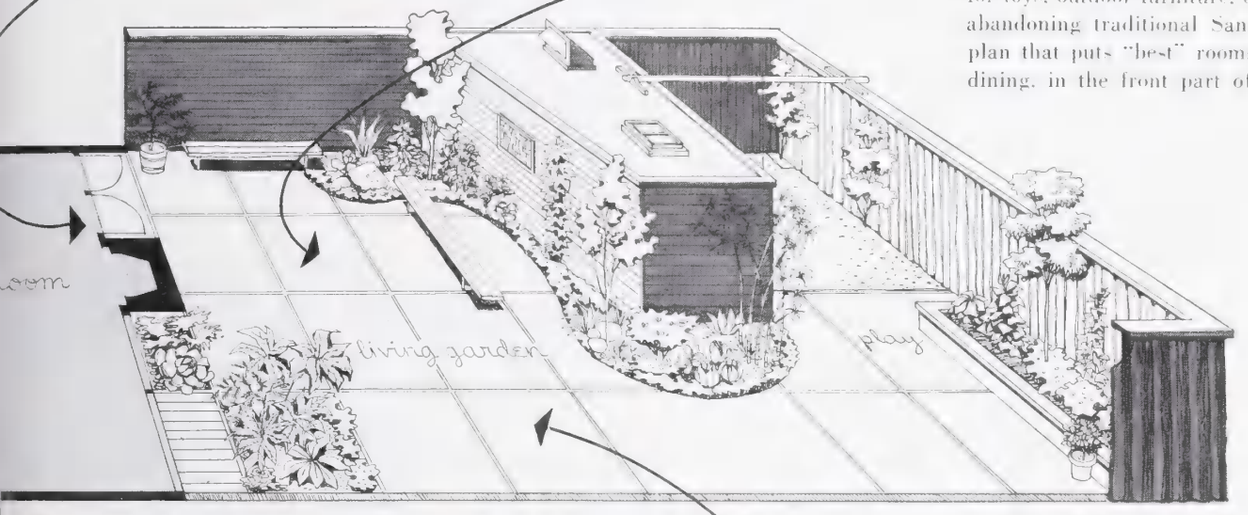
GARDEN LIVING on a 25-foot lot

Daring to be different turned an unpromising site into the kind of living many people fail to achieve even in the country where space is unlimited



Entry court (left) takes place of usual land-wasting, long service alley. Street view of house (far left) is pleasant, pleases both owners and neighborhood, although front room is the kitchen instead of living room. House was completed in 1951 at remarkably low cost of $12.30 a foot.

Sunny south side was reserved for terrace and play yard (separated by storage unit for toys, outdoor furniture, etc). This forced abandoning traditional San Francisco floor plan that puts "best" rooms, ie., living and dining, in the front part of the house.

Lot is only 25′ wide but now provides attractive street-side planting and a handsome entry garden plus surprise of a spacious and pleasantly sunny private garden world way back from the street noises. All this is possible because owners dared defy convention which calls for full basement, side entry stairs, and a second-floor living room.

How to get individuality in a small standard apartment

By avoiding stereotyped furniture groupings and by decorating as they would in a new house, these renters took their three-room apartment out of the rubber-stamp category

Shoji screens, paneled in Chinese rice paper, curiously inset with leaves and butterflies, form a translucent sliding partition between foyer and living room. Used again in the dining alcove, their pattern unifies the apartment like a design motif. They are lightweight, hung from an I-beam, but their floor-to-ceiling scale and structural form create a look of permanent and distinguished architecture.

Instead of adhering to the cliché of centering the sofa on the wall, the Mesbergs placed theirs off center. This utilizes space clear to the corner and frees the rest of the wall for a reading-writing desk, separated from sitting group by a right-angled love seat. Sofa faces TV alcove. One floor-length blind covering standard-height windows gives the illusion of a glass wall. Large-scale hanging brass lamps add to the general air of permanence.

In even the finest apartment you must create your own architectural individuality. Custom-made cabinet work is a sure solution, but to be effective and worth its cost it must be generously scaled. This wall-wide television-china cupboard is as impressively proportioned and useful as a storage wall, yet it can be removed in toto for use elsewhere. Brass strips are hand-grips. Floors are stained dark teak, another individual touch.

Apartment of Mr. and Mrs. B. G. Mesberg, New York

Everett Brown, Decorator

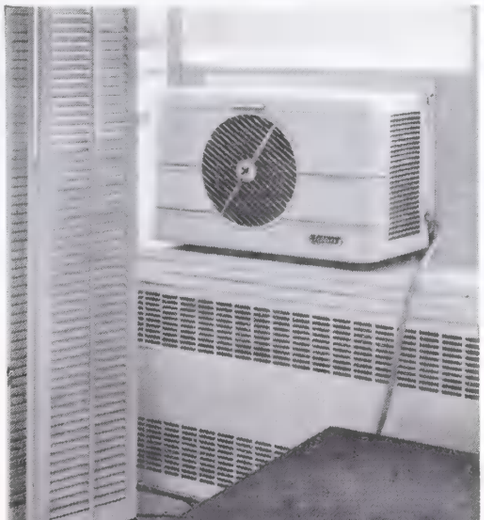
A room air conditioner keeps this fragile-looking bedroom in the pink

Most tenants of city apartments restrict themselves rather obviously to dull colors that camouflage grime and soot. That is why the Mesbergs' petal-pink bedroom comes as a delightful surprise. The secret of its practical freshness is that rather than try to hide soil, they have chosen to prevent it, specifically with a ¾-ton air conditioner installed in one window. This protects their pastel walls and silk damask by filtering the air, besides cooling the room in summer. Shutters hung from the ceiling conceal the air conditioning unit (opposite), yet look like a built-in architectural feature.

Because an air conditioner does more than cool the air, this bright room forecasts a change in city colors

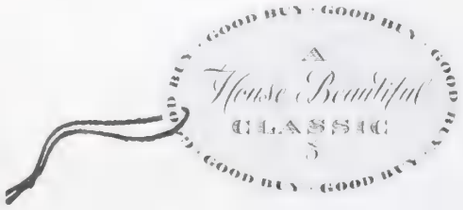
Individuality is born of the willingness to try something new. The entire Mesberg apartment proves this. But the charming pink bedroom—an unexpected pleasure in a city apartment—is a particularly significant demonstration of what can happen if you keep alert to the meaning of the new technologies around you.



Air conditioning, for example, to most people primarily suggests the comforting relief of cool indoor air during hot weather. But do you know that in addition to cooling the air, an air conditioner also filters the outside air and can be used in cold weather as a ventilator? Once you grasp what this can mean in reducing city grime, you will see, as the Mesbergs did, how an air conditioner can let you live with light, bright colors that you never before thought practical in a city full of soot and dust.

And so it is the air filtering and ventilating action of a ¾-ton window-unit room cooler that makes possible these pale pink walls and precious pastel silks in a sooty city.

Protruding into a room, hardly any air cooling unit can be said to be decorative, but this one is fortuitously concealed by a wall of folding shutters. The movable louvers provide generous openings so that this covering does not interfere with the intake or distribution of air. And since the shutter installation also smooths out an irregular wall, this solution seems made to order as a unifying decorative device.



Furniture like this marble-top modern chest and the brass-banded upholstered bed opposite is large enough in scale to be used importantly—one piece to a wall. Most city grime that might mar this pink rug is caught in filter of air conditioner. Filter is removed and vacuumed every few weeks. Below, see how accessible unit is.

A piece that goes anywhere

It goes with anything—modern or traditional. It goes anywhere—dining room, living room or bedroom. It goes along with your own changing life—when you move, when your needs expand with a growing family or contract as children grow up and leave home. It has a place and a purpose for every situation.

A piece of furniture with such versatility often tends to be deliberately nondescript, without character. But such is not the case here. This Heritage-Henredon buffet has distinction in its lines and proportions (21″ x 68″ x 33″ high), enrichment in its diamond-shaped marquetry. It is made of walnut in two finishes—light or regular. The hinges are piano, the catches magnetic. It rolls on casters. It costs about $300 (slightly higher in the West) and comes with two removable trays on the right, one adjustable shelf on the left. Additional trays cost $10 each.

Shown here as a dining room buffet, this Heritage-Henredon piece serves equally well in the bedroom for storing clothing or in the living room for books, records, bar equipment and the like. How to
DOCTOR THE CLIMATE IN YOUR GARDEN

You can "move" parts of your garden 300 to 500 miles north or south, if you apply what we know today about the many micro-climates in even the smallest lot

By LEAVITT DUDLEY

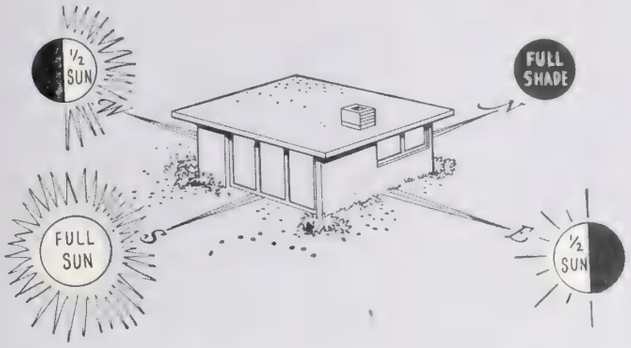
A gardener works with many climates. Knowledge of these micro-climates can not only make familiar plants grow better, but it can open the way to more imaginative and varied gardening. Species not commonly grown in your area may find comfortable climatic pockets in your yard, caused by ideal combinations of weather-making conditions.

Notice the wealth of micro-climates (1 to 15 numbered on plan above) the gardener finds to work with, changing almost by the foot on the average lot. They range from the cold, perpetually shaded north walls, suitable for your hardy plants, to hothouse conditions under a glass enclosure for frost-shy kinds.

Around the house you also find differences between areas in full sun all day long, such as the south walls, half sun with morning shade to the west, half sun with afternoon shade to the east, varying degrees of filtered sun under the lath, areas more open to cooling air circulation than others and those exposed to greater or lesser degrees of radiated or reflected heat.

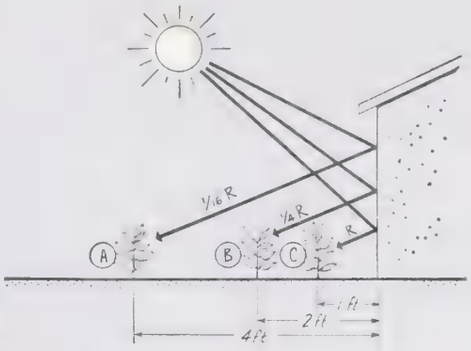
Temperatures change over exposed flat areas even though exposed to the same degree of daily sun according to whether or not they are surrounded by soil, grass, water, or paving.

Under and around the trees and shrubs are an endless and varying assortment of micro-climates.



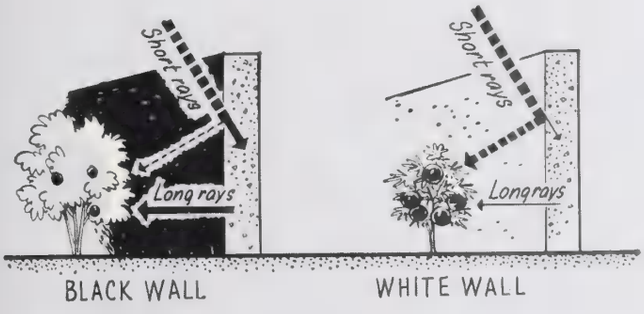
And if you still can't find a climate to suit the particular plant you wish to grow, you can almost tailor one to its requirements by proper use of pruning shears or with additional structure, as we show you later. The whole folklore about the "green thumb" really revolves around the ability to notice and capitalize on the little differences in climate that make the big differences in plant growth. Avoiding frosts is one example.

Frosts are a major garden problem in nearly every section of the United States. Micro-climates play one of their most important parts in the protection of your garden against frost hazards.



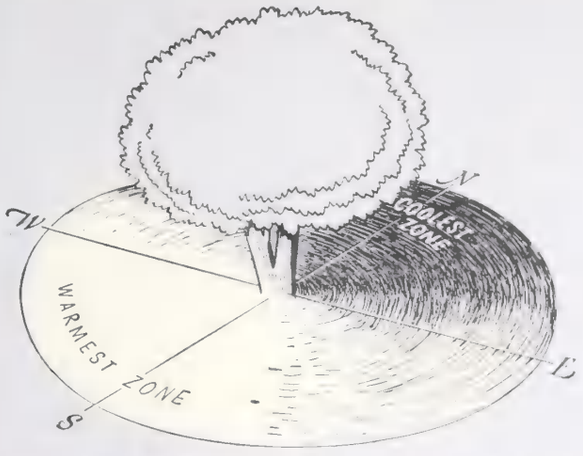
Then, too, high wind can dessicate a plant. During strong winds, particularly if they are hot and dry, give your plants more than the normal amount of water. Leaf burn occurs when moisture evaporates from the tissues faster than the roots can supply it. You can identify burn by the dry brown leaves on the tree after a windstorm. Most of them are noticed on the windward sides, showing the effectiveness of the tree as its own windbreak.

A few feet may mean the difference between a healthy plant and a sick one. The great variety of micro-climates explains why a plant which flourished in one location will do poorly just a few feet away.

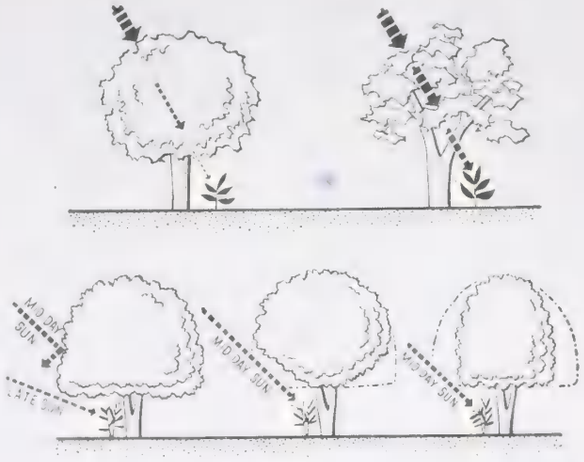


HOUSE BEAUTIFUL'S CLIMATE CONTROL PROJECT

Your house establishes your most constant solar pattern. The north, almost perpetually shaded, never warms up from direct sun and is the location for hardy plants which can stand the cold. Tender kinds find the full sun of the south walls more suitable. Though east and west walls receive the same amount of sunshine, it is hotter to the west because the morning sun uses some of its energy to overcome the cold of the preceding night.



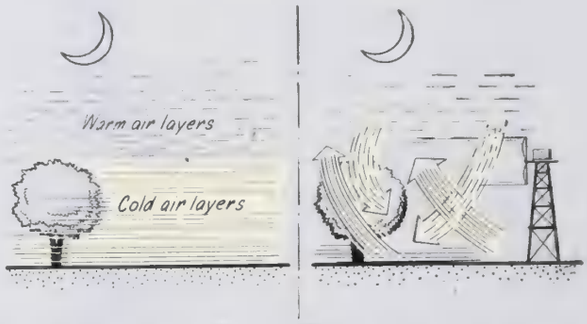
Radiation from walls or fences supplements direct solar heat. In addition to the direct heat of the sun, plants near walls or fences receive additional heat radiated from the surfaces. This amount decreases rapidly with the increasing distance from the radiator, so plant (C) receives 16 times as much radiation as plant (A), due to its relative position.



The color and the material of any surface determine the type of radiation. Direct sun heat comes in the form of short rays, but changes to long rays when absorbed and re-radiated. The darker the color, the more short rays are absorbed—and later re-radiated as long rays. The lighter the color, the less the absorption and the greater the direct reflection. Both long and short heat rays stimulate plant growth.

Reflecting surfaces bring light to dark corners. Plants need light for proper development, but many are tucked away in dark corners of a patio or garden. White or light-colored walls on the sunny side, or aluminum reflectors, can help by sending reflected light to them.

Plants are variable sunlight regulators. Sunlight is filtered according to density of leaves. Shadows thus are less dense than those cast by houses or other solid structures. When sun is at a low angle (early and late in day) direct sunlight reaches all parts of ground below branches.



Judicious pruning controls the amount of sun under a plant. Thinning the branches admits more light to the entire ground surface below. To bring in more of the warmer rays during the middle of the day, either trim the branches higher or narrow the shape of the plant.

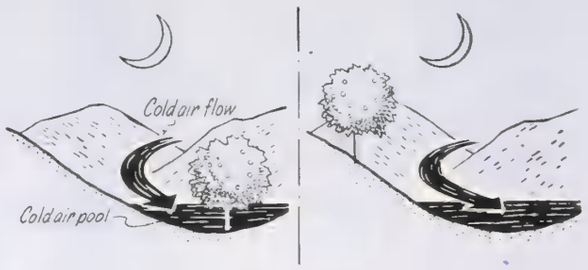
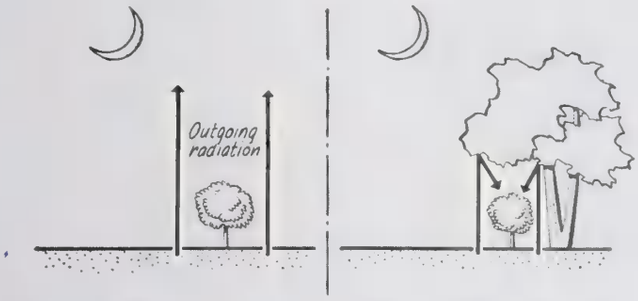
Temperature readings and your local weather conditions are a tip-off for frost possibilities during the night. A clear sky permits complete escape of radiated heat; an overcast sky reflects it back. Frosts are rare on cloudy nights.

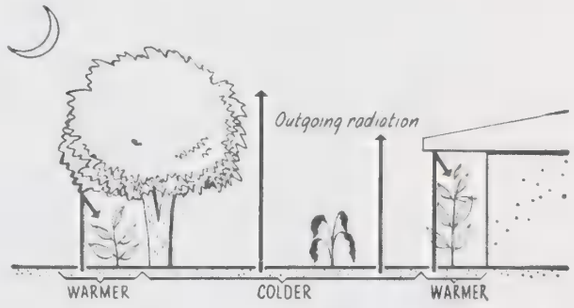
Air settles in distinct layers. The lowest may be freezing while that ten feet higher is several degrees warmer. Wind mixes these layers, raising the over-all temperatures. In the absence of wind, farmers create their own with motor-driven propellers mounted on high platforms.



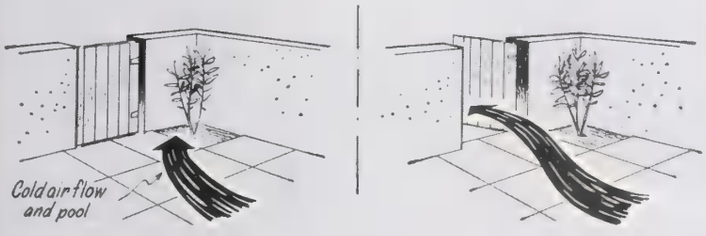
Most frosts which concern the gardener are the short radiation frosts of purely local origin. All occur when the net outgoing radiation at night is great enough to dissipate the sun heat stored during the day, dropping the temperature below the freezing point. The dangerous period is reached usually in the early morning before the sun rises. Critical temperatures for plants vary according to their hardiness and the parts affected.



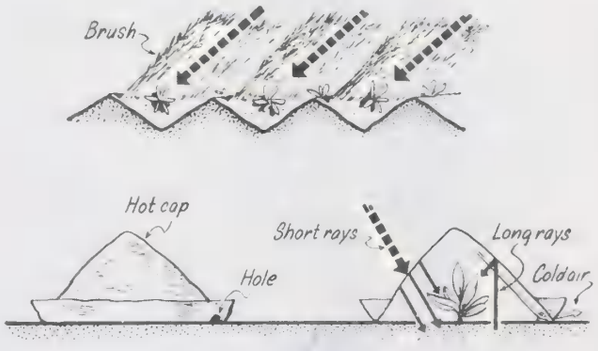
The more heat your ground can absorb during the day, the longer it can radiate at night to stall off freezing temperatures and frost formation. In critical periods, don't cultivate the soil (loose soil can't absorb heat readily). For the same reason, do not apply loose mulching material, such as peat, until after danger of frosts has passed.



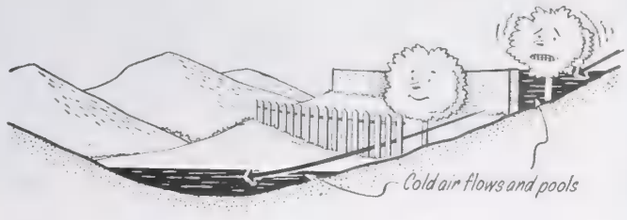
Fog or rain blocks escape of ground heat to the icy layers of the upper sky, bounces the heat back, thus warming your plants and preventing frosting. Home gardeners can sleep soundly on rainy, foggy and most cloudy nights without fear of frost. If the clouds are high, you get less protection.



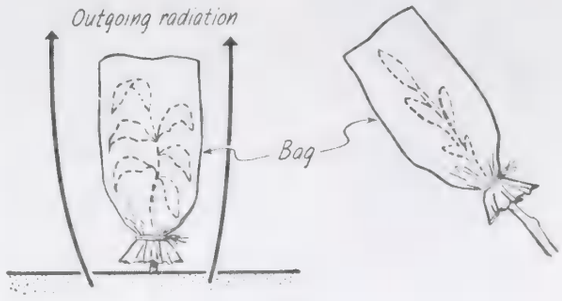
If you garden in a hollow, you're inviting frost. Either grow hardy plants or plan to stay up nights trying to protect tender ones. Cold air, draining into low spots, reduces temperatures and creates ideal frost pockets. Plants set out a few feet up the slope escape cold airflow altogether.



Heat lost by radiation goes straight up, disappearing into outer space unless stopped by a "ceiling" of some kind. Blocked by a tree or other obstacle, the heat rays are reflected back, keeping the area below warmer. You can detect the difference yourself on a clear "harvest moon" night.



Any opaque material stops heat loss by radiation. Plants under the shelter of a tree, roof overhang or other "ceiling" have a better chance to escape frost damage than those in the open, though the air temperatures are the same. Use your south wall overhangs for better luck with tender plants.



Don't let a sun pocket become a frost pocket at night. Cold air flows along near the ground, collects in pools. Open a gate or provide some other exit on the low side and near the ground to keep cold air moving away. It's a good idea to open a gate on the low side of any enclosed, uncovered area at night to be on the safe side with sensitive plants.

"Brushing" is inserted to admit sun during the day but stop vertical radiation at night. "Hotcaps" allow penetration of short rays during the day but prevent escape of long rays. Small holes at the base allow the escape of the thin layer of cold air which collects at the bottom of the caps, but do not admit any more from the outside.

A solid fence or dense planting upslope from your garden may divert cold airflow, but leave planting loose downslope with branches high off the ground. Fences should be pickets, laths or louvers so they create only a minimum obstacle to air circulation. The air flow is naturally slow and weak.

Frost protection works on the basis of keeping heat in rather than cold out. Bags tied around bases of plants or buds and flowers of branches thus are of little value because air inside is about as cold as that outside. The big heat reserve is in the soil, not in the plant.

To create architectural interest while providing more storage and new charm was the problem of the Sherle Wagners in decorating the David Harris apartment. Here an unused maid's room was turned into a gay breakfast room by hiding ugly pipes with a tent-like canvas ceiling. Its scalloped valance extends over pull-type bamboo window shade and flower-strewn wallpaper.

Rejuvenation of an old town house

By JOHN HILL

From the street side it's one of many, musty brownstone houses lined up in a row. When you walk in, you get a fresh, airy feeling as if from a country breeze. Yet architect Edgar Tafel did surprisingly little structurally when he remodeled two floors of this house for himself and his wife.

There were two ways for him to remodel: first, to change as little as possible: second, to rip out everything down to the bare frame and start over. The second method Mr. Tafel rejected as unnecessary and too expensive. He therefore chose the first. He made the minimum of changes for the maximum effect, and in the process arrived at refreshingly new solutions to his (Please turn the page) particular problem. What was suitable he kept: the parquet oak floor, the charming plaster frieze at the top of the living room walls, the brick "party" wall and wooden beams, and, in general, the original floor plan. The bricks and beams, discovered when badly cracked plaster was removed, were promptly turned to handsome advantage. They were cleaned up and left to make their own natural appeal, adding character at no extra cost.

An old town house, which became a chopped-up rooming house with awkwardly inserted sinks and stoves (sketch right), was remodeled into the open, airy and comfortable home below and opposite. The architect turned everything possible to fullest advantage.

Ground floor and first floor were made into a self-sufficient duplex apartment for the owners. The upper floors are rented. The first floor now can either be opened almost entirely from street side to garden or be partitioned by means of a sliding door into living and dining-bedroom areas.

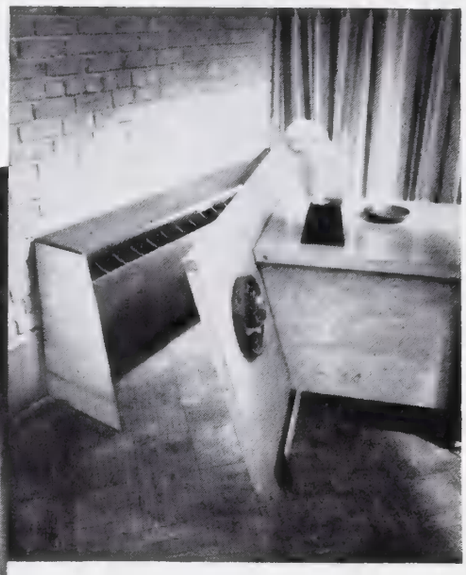
But above all, careful use was made of existing features. In Mr. Tafel's words, "I let the solution of my own problem—not a prefixed notion of what it should be—decide what kind of remodeling job I would do."

First floor. Little was done to the basic floor plan of the original town house. Unessentials were removed; only necessities such as storage added.

Ground floor. The new garden-guest room (also TV room) was formerly the basement kitchen. New planning, rather than new structure, was most important.

The niche for the old wood stove in the former kitchen was made into a fireplace with an opening in correct proportion (for draft) to the small flue. Immediately to the left there is a closed TV set. The windows looking out on the garden are fully draped to unify the wall (compare with sketch).

The dining room-master bedroom (above) can be entirely separated from the living room on the first floor by means of sliding doors completely recessed in the partition walls. The Victorian fireplace was left virtually untouched as was the frieze below the ceiling. Note neat trick devised with an easel (right) for hiding the radiator.



A modern kitchen was made out of the former kitchenette and bathroom. (See plan opposite for new location of bathroom.) It can be shut off from other rooms with a sliding door, barely visible to the left of the doorway. A recess was created in the wall to the right to hold serving trays and the like.

To the right of the fireplace in the living room is another clever device for concealing a radiator. It combines a desk and housing for a high-fidelity music system, effectively decorated with Chinese medallions. Custom built, the legs of this piece were carefully designed to match the legs of the furniture in the rest of the room, thus achieving integration and harmony.

Remarkably efficient and compact storage space was built into the remodeled town house and with fine architectural results (right and opposite). The sketch above indicates former situation. Door between chest and clothes closet leads to new bathroom, space for which was found in entrance hall. Living room is visible beyond.

You are looking (above) from the bedroom towards the fireplace wall of the living room. Left, you can see how the sliding doors completely close off the bedroom from the living room. (Plans are under way to turn this room into the guest room and the guest room on the ground floor into the master bedroom.) Thus the Tafels have a choice of complete and airy openness during the day and seclusion and privacy at night. All this was accomplished with as few changes in the old house as necessary, and by letting the remodeling be determined by the actual situation, rather than by preconceived notions.

Secrets to success in CITY GARDENING

City gardening tests your mettle. Scorching heat and a greasy grime that coats the leaves are the toughest challenges any gardener can face. Add poor soil, bad drainage (rainwater flows away to the sewers instead of soaking into the soil for tomorrow's reserve) plus the high incidence of accidents and it's a wonder there are so many fine city gardens. That there are successful ones is due to a wholely different approach to gardening. The art is new to us but very ancient to Rome, Paris, Madrid and Mexico City.

1 Choose plants able to survive in the dust and dirt of city air. These are now well known. (See list on page 233.)

2 Limit yourself to a few plants and mass these for greatest show and least upkeep. It's surprising how few plants are needed to convert a city courtyard into a garden. Ancient Rome practiced this trick.

3 Pack the soil with moisture-holding humus (buy as peat; work a 3" layer into soil). Then feed and water generously: rooting is shallow, most rainfall is drained away and the heat of the city is drying.

4 Spray or dust regularly to be sure insects or diseases don't get started. They spread far more rapidly than imaginable in city-weakened plants.

5 Use pools and fountains for sound and motion, sculpture and architecture for shadow play, painted walls for cheerful coloring.

GARDEN OF JOSEPH GOLDSTONE

Use only a few elements, but each the finest of its kind. Ruth May, landscape architect.

6 Protect new plants from sun for several weeks. Plants must adjust to city glare from nearby walls and windows.

GARDEN OF JOSEPH GOLDSTONE

Let permanent plantings provide the green background; use pots for temporary color.

7 Use louvers, not solid fence or wall, to avoid gusty whirlpooling. If this nuisance already exists, add louvers above present solid walls. Foliage is best wind filter of all, if you can spare the space.

8 Support plants with inconspicuous staking, or tie them to fence or walls. You can't afford to lose branches. Growth in the city is never as vigorous as in more favorable environments.

10 Elevate tender plants; cold air collects in "pools" in lowest parts of garden. (Turn to page 233)

False perspective creates the illusion of space here.

BEFORE

When Engineer W. F. Kuehneman rented space in the People's Gas & Light Company building in Chicago, it looked like this—uninviting and unaccommodating. The outer office was a dark hole, and the offices with windows were narrow and restricted. Transformation required relatively few structural changes. Glass, mirrors and lively color were hub of change.

When the busy man must spend

A night at the office

When the commuter misses the last train, a properly equipped office can be his haven. Here's what an efficiency engineer did to meet his need

Cabinets under the window sills sto clothing, necessities and bedding, pl television and lockable liquor storag When closed, they are non-committa give no hint of their contents. No hôw mirror shown in color photo (o posite, top) widens the room opticall Windows have two sets of light-diffuse to temper sky glare that is so bothe some in tall buildings. Counter surfaced with putty-colored Micart

Everett Brown, designer and decorator

Making the office a pleasant environment for the day is no new trick: Furnish it like a living room. Once that is done, it is only one step further to making it convertible for emergency sleeping. The sofa is generous enough in length and width and the foam rubber pad lifts up to anchor sheets and blankets. The large mirror makes the rather narrow room seem wider, more "decorated."

ALL PHOTOGRAPHS BY EMELIE DANIELSON NICHOLSON

Refrigerator and snack-making facilities in the secretary's outer office are equally useful day or night. The typical office wash basin was enclosed and "prettied" with more light and a sparkling paint job in white and red enamel. White desk tops are Micarta, aiding the immaculate look. Office provides every requirement for an overnight stay, except for a shower.

Pool "house" provides shady spot without cutting off breezes or making lot seem smaller. Fence is Transite, painted for year-round cheerful color (photo made from floor-to-ceiling glass wall of master bedroom); 32′ pool was custom-designed to fit area, can be duplicated for about $3,500. Standard rectangle would have made yard seem jammed.

Three kinds of fences were used by Mr. Church to gain variety, excitement and color because, unlike more spacious gardens, there was no chance to get these from fine old plants. Here the "back"side of Transite fence faces parking court, a dramatic example of how good designing capitalizes on problems.

How to provide a swimming pool, terrace, flowers—plus

Privacy on a 100' lot

This is no assignment for an amateur garden designer. It challenges the skill of the best landscape architect. The construction, though, can be a home job, as was this one. Only the pool-building was sublet to a contractor.

The Jones lot is in a built-up part of a small town. The owners demanded privacy from the four neighboring houses, some flowers but not enough to burden them with the upkeep (both Mr. and Mrs. Jones are employed), a big terrace for frequent entertaining, parking space for five or six cars, and color not only in seasonal flowers but year round in the structural parts of the garden. A swimming pool "would be wonderful—but not in front of the living room, please."

Landscape architect Thomas Church started with the pool, found a way to fit it into the bedroom terrace. The result is a real feeling of luxury in a small and simple house—and a terrace off the living room, away from the muss and reflections from the pool. Handsome, colorful fences insure privacy everywhere, insulating it as effectively as acreage used to do for country estates. (Please turn to page 207)

Flowers are in beds out of the way and made more important by their backgrounds. Fence heights were set to come to the eave lines of the neighboring houses. Some neighbors also wanted fencing, so they shared cost of lumber and helped Mr. Jones with the sawing and nailing. Straight lines of fence and flower beds contrast with flowing curves of terrace (see plan).

Wisdom for renters

TWO PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

These three rooms are a distillation of the basic wisdom which turns rented quarters into personable homes. Study them, then turn back to page 112 to see how they carry out our 7 rules for renters

Take advantage of posts and jogs. At first they may look like liabilities. But they may actually be the ready-made framework for an interesting architectural niche or for additional storage space. In the bedroom of the Sidney Sher house (above) an awkward post (right) was advantageously used as an anchor for a bank of overhead cabinets which extends across the wall and creates an out-of-the-ordinary solution. Bed is lighted and glamorized by strip lighting over and under the custom-built cabinets. W. & J. Sloane, decorators.

THE DAILY ARTS OF GOOD LIVING

TO THAW OR NOT TO THAW

Look for the answer in this picture—two beautiful porterhouse steaks, one hard-frozen right out of the freezer—solid, intact. The other, thawed at room temperature, stands in a pool of drip. Watch that drip. It means loss of vitamins, loss of juices, loss of flavor

By POPPY CANNON

Anytime, anywhere among people interested in good eating, you can start a hot argument about the best way to cook frozen foods, particularly frozen meats. Most of us accepted long ago the premise that vegetables should be brought from sub-zero to piping hot as quickly as possible. But when it comes to meats—

"Thaw, of course," say the traditionalists. "Haven't we always been taught that meat should be brought to room temperature before we cook it?"

"Bunk," says the Rough-and-Ready Type. "Where's the convenience of frozen meat if you have to thaw it? It's quicker to drive to the butcher shop and pick up a roast than to thaw it in the refrigerator the way they tell you—five hours to the pound. Why, I take my steaks right out of the freezer, plunk them on the broiler. And they're great."

"I'm never sure," says the Lady-on-the-Fence. "Sometimes in an emergency I've had to cook meats frozen. Once in a while they turn out well. But at other times they are just beautiful on the outside but icy-cold in the center. I have no idea about how to time them."

"Maybe yes, maybe no," say the experts. (Which cookbook do you read?) "It's a matter of personal preference."

"If you thaw, be sure to do it in the refrigerator."

"Always cook meat as soon as it is thawed—when there are still some ice crystals visible all over it."

"While it is still very cold."

"Room temperature is all right for thawing," say some.

"You could use an electric fan: it cuts down on time." Say others. "Never use an electric fan."

"Thaw in a very slow oven."

"Use a very hot oven."

What's a poor cook to do?

HOUSE BEAUTIFUL says cook your meats from the solid-frozen state. They taste better. They are better nutritionally. In general, use the same methods as for cooking fresh meats. As a rough rule of thumb, increase the time from half again to twice as long. But always use a meat thermometer. (The best on the market cost less than $4.)

How Commander Kotschevar selected and "educated" a talented panel of judges was described in the August issue of HOUSE BEAUTIFUL—"Are Gourmets Born or Made?" There we told about the tests through which he selected a panel of 26 judges who proved over and over again (Please turn to page 214)

HOUSE BEAUTIFUL says cook your meats from the solid-frozen state. They taste better. They are better nutritionally.

Our conclusions are based on years of experience in our own kitchens and at our own dining tables, but even more specifically, upon the results of three and a half years of research on nutritive values as well as flavor of meats thawed before and during cooking. Research was sponsored by HOUSE BEAUTIFUL and conducted at Columbia University by Commander Lendal H. Kotschevar, Ph.D., former Head of Commissary Research Division of the U. S. Hot breads and hot meats

Variations unlimited

Ancient and honored pair among victuals—wheat and meat. Hot sandwiches, of course, but we're shy of the phrase because too often it brings to mind mushy bread, indifferent meat under a pall of thickish, pale, cool gravy. Yet how good, useful and versatile they can be for children and guests, for appetizers, lunches, suppers—even breakfast. Here we present a brief revue, merely suggestions of their endless possibilities.

To make life simpler, all the meats come ready-to-eat from cans. Perhaps you haven't noticed recently the galaxy on your grocery shelves. Canned meats are getting better and better all the time.

If you are busy—and wise—you will keep a supply of many breads in your freezer and cans by the half dozen on your shelves. Insurance against come-what-may!

New roasters and grills, electric skillets, infra-red broilers, some with baking attachments, make it possible to produce delicious, unusual hot bread and meat combinations with the greatest aplomb. It won't matter whether the family comes to the kitchen or the kitchen (at least the cooking part of it) comes to the family. (Please turn to page 164)

Old-fashioned Bread

in a New-Fashioned Kitchen

By FRANCIS KALNAY

BEFORE. These are the owner's drawings of a kitchen in an old house in Montclair, N. J., before modernizing. Sketches show inconveniently high wood closet, equipment standing free against cold white tile walls. All the planning and decorating, even laying of linoleum counters, were done by the owner, Mrs. A. W. Baker, and her family "with no professional advice or assistance." The job took about 10 months and cost approximately $2,500.

So many people live with the idea that baking with yeast is difficult. They say that with yeast, bread-baking takes too much time. People who entertain such notions are in for some pleasant surprises. Sometimes I hear from young women who adore homemade bread: "Yeast bread? I wouldn't have the slightest notion how to begin!"

"The beginning," I argue, "is luxurious. It involves reading exciting recipes in a reclining position. When you have found one to inspire you, before you know it, you'll line up the ingredients. As soon as you crumble the yeastcake or sprinkle the package of granulated yeast into lukewarm water, yeast comes alive, and instantly you have a servant—not one, but a whole army is ready to work for you."

To get your hand in, learn the feel of yeast dough and you start off in a glow of success. Why not begin with a packaged hot roll mix? Follow the simple directions. Knead the dough three minutes after second rising, shape into two small loaves instead of rolls. Increase baking time (you'll need 40 to 50 minutes) and there you are. You've baked your first loaf of bread.

Next time perhaps you'll feel more ambitious. You might send away to Great Valley Mills, Paoli, Pennsylvania, for Cornell Bread Mix. Creamy white, incredibly delicious, this bread was developed at Cornell University. It's bread you can live on nutritionally—and happily. Once again, follow package directions. Old-fashioned Bread to make your bread quick on the double, double your yeast. This procedure, which is currently much discussed as the "no-time method," is best used with a rich dough (in which you use milk and butter) where there is plenty of food for the yeast to feed upon. You'll get an old-fashioned, yeastier flavor which most people find particularly delicious.

Flour, yeast, liquid and salt are the four basic ingredients in bread. There are also four basic ways to prepare bread. Two belong to the classical school: two are up to the minute.

The Batter Method is the newest and quickest method for those concerned with saving time and labor. This is the new blitz-plan to develop yeast concoctions as fast as possible, particularly casserole breads and sweet rolls. Kneading and shaping are neither necessary nor possible. The bread mixture is limited to a single rising in the bowl or right in the baking pan: then it is ready for the oven.

The Straight-Dough Method is very popular because it produces excellent bread, yet is so simple. It involves only one mixing. As soon as the ingredients are combined, the dough is allowed to rise in a warm place.

The Sponge-and-Dough Method is as old as the hills, yet bread experts insist that to produce the best quality bread, this process is it. The sponge-and-dough, as you can tell from its name, requires two separate mixings. The first mixture contains only liquid, yeast and enough flour to make a soft batter. This batter, the so-called "sponge," is then allowed to ferment. After a while it is ready to receive more flour and the balance of the ingredients. When these ingredients are added, the sponge becomes dough. (Please turn to page 217)

Baking Bread on "The Dutch Plate"

Bread baked in a brick oven such as a built-in Dutch Oven, has that beautiful even crust and an aroma of its own, too delicate to express in words. The homey qualities of the old hearth ovens inspired the author to design a rectangular ceramic plate which he calls the Dutch Plate. Made of specially formed, heat-resistant clay, the plate measuring about 10" x 14" is substantial, yet quite easy to handle. It was designed to fit on the rack of the modern oven. The plate is preheated simultaneously with the oven. At the proper time, the dough to be baked is placed on the hot plate where it will rise instantly. The result will be a loaf characteristic of those baked in old brick ovens.

The Dutch Plate eliminates baking pans and greasing. It permits the dough to bake in an atmosphere of even heat and will produce a sweet and evenly colored crust which is so essential in a good home-baked bread. Another practical feature: You can serve the bread directly on it and since the clay retains heat, your bread will remain warm for a long time. These plates carry a simple, charming folk-motive which can easily blend with almost any kitchen décor.

Two "peels" (the baker's wooden shovels) come with each plate. These are important, since they serve to shove breads in and out of the oven. They are graceful and may be used also as breadboards on the table. To complete the ensemble, the author has designed a bread cloth. Made of imported linen and somewhat larger than the usual cloths used in the kitchen, this bread cloth has a "window." When you use it as a bread cloth, you can lift the window and peek in to see what's cooking in the ferment. This opening will be handy when you decide to use the cloth to protect freshly baked rolls or biscuits. By lifting the little "window" one can reach for a roll without the danger of cooling the whole basketful. The design is emblematic of all that goes with yeast bread. It will charm you. This handsome, newly designed and manufactured bread-baking outfit will be at Lord & Taylor in New York.

STRAVINSKY: from enfant terrible to old master

There was a riot in Paris when Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring" was first played and danced. Today, 41 years later, it has become a concert classic

By RICHARD WILLIAMS

Last season I heard Pierre Monteux and the Boston Symphony perform Stravinsky's The Rite of Spring. As always when I hear him conduct the work, I was thoroughly interested, carried along, fascinated and at the end not a little shaken. The power of the composition remains. Its colors, still raw and plangent, assail you; its rhythms beat at you; the music retains its anger and its beauty. And yet, here and there, in one spot or the other, I had the feeling that the musical language had become, if not old-fashioned, then at least tame and even a little naive. It seemed like yesterday's mysticism, like rereading Arthur Machen or James Branch Cabell. Ten years ago I would not have thought it possible that this obstreperous composition could become to any degree less than frightening, that Stravinsky could become an "old master" in our time.

Sacre du Printemps is one more illustration, a particularly illustrative one, of the old experience that yesterday's shocker becomes today's school text. Forty-one years have passed since its first performance. That premiere was possibly the biggest scandal in the history of music, even including the history of music as lived in Paris, where scandals are provoked at the drop of a dissonance.

Stravinsky was commissioned to compose The Rite of Spring as a ballet for Diaghilev's Russian Ballet. His Petrushka had just been given by the same company with Nijinsky dancing and Monteux as the conductor. (Please turn to page 203)

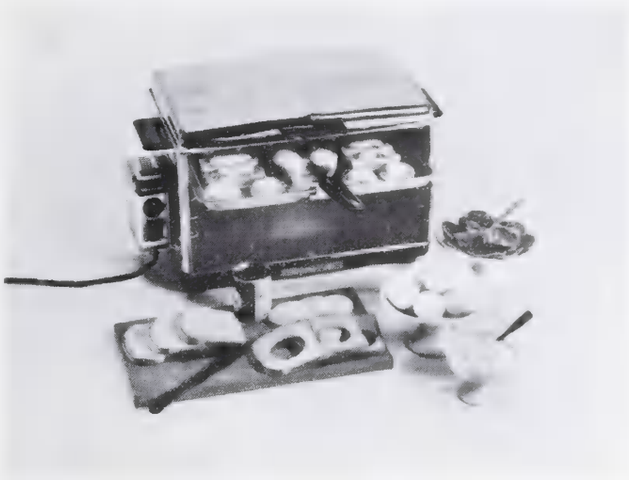
Waffled French Toast Sandwiches

An interesting, easy version of New Orleans' Lost Bread, Bavarian Poor Knights or California's Monte Cristo. Make sandwiches from thinly sliced white bread leaving the crusts for extra flavor. For filling, use ham or tongue spread, liver or chicken paté. Dip into milk and egg mixture (2 eggs slightly beaten with 1 cup milk, salt, pepper). Serves at least 4. Here they're baked waffle-style on an Arvin Lectric Cook (Arvin Industries, Inc., Columbus, Ind.). But you could use a sandwich grill, griddle or frying pan. Just brown in butter, first on one side, then the other.

Baked French Toast Sandwiches

Another version—instead of dipping the bread into milk and eggs, you pour it on. Make sandwiches as described in the recipe in opposite column, or use thinly sliced luncheon meat or chopped beef and some thin slices of sharp cheddar cheese.



Season the milk and egg mixture with ½ teaspoon onion salt, ½ teaspoon celery salt, 1 teaspoon prepared mustard. Pour over sandwiches in a shallow buttered baking dish. Bake in moderate oven 350° F. about 30 minutes. Serve immediately and your sandwiches are puffy almost like a soufflé.

Hashburgers de Luxe

Open a can of corned beef hash at both ends and push out the meat in a single roll. Cut into 4 thick slices. Brown on both sides. Serve each hashburger on a toasted, halved hamburger bun. Surround with heated canned French fried onions. Serve with a snappy relish like "21" Sauce Maison, for instance, Heinz's Hamburger Relish, Snider's Old-Fashioned Chili Sauce or your own homemade relish.

Sturdy table grill is Universal Cook-A-Matic Waffle-Grill (Landers, Frary & Clark, New Britain, Connecticut).

Soufflèd Canapés

It's amazing how much drama you can achieve with so little effort. Cut thin-sliced bread into circles, diamonds, squares, fingers. Toast or sauté lightly on one side. Cover the other side generously with your favorite meat spread—deviled ham, tongue—whatever you fancy. At the last moment make the topping. Beat 1 egg white until stiff and gently fold it into 1 cup mayonnaise. Place a spoonful on each canapé. Set under the broiler just long enough to puff up and gild.

Tongue Tartars are excellent too. Instead of a spread, use canned sliced tongue. Cover with tartar sauce. You can buy it ready made or make it by combining equal parts drained India Relish and mayonnaise. Place a spoonful on each canapé. Sprinkle very lightly with grated cheese and set under broiler 1 or 2 minutes.

Do it all where and when your guests can admire the procedure—with a trusty Dormeyer (Dormeyer Corporation, Chicago, Illinois).

Sunday Morning Sandwiches

Your breakfast ham and toast make a fine pair, grilled together. It's interesting to use 2 different breads—one slice of white, one of whole wheat. For the filling use a breakfast meat—ham or the new bacon spread. Butter the top and bottom of the sandwich as well as the inside for extra goodness.

Everything cooks together right at the table—ham-and-toast sandwiches in the Westinghouse Grill (Westinghouse Electric Corporation, Mansfield, Ohio)—eggs in the Sunbeam Automatic Cooker (Sunbeam Corp., Chicago). And you can use the General Electric Automatic Coffee Maker (General Electric Co., Bridgeport, Conn.) too with the convenient control panel with five outlets (Arthur J. Koch, Cambridge, Mass.).

Glamorized Hot Dogs

The lowly, little sausage is welcome at any party, especially if it's the dainty, canned Vienna sausage nestled into small finger rolls. Drain and grill sausages. Split finger rolls. Spread with butter into which you have incorporated a bit of chili powder. Serve piping hot. If you want to make them ahead of time, wrap in foil, freeze and reheat—still in the foil—in the oven or under the broiler.

Garlic Bread

In all its manifold phases garlic bread can be made ahead, reheated in foil. Most interesting when there's meat in it. Here's a good basic recipe: Combine ¼ lb. softened butter with 1 clove garlic put through press, 1 small can ham, bacon or any other favorite meat spread. Cut French bread diagonally. Spread seasoned butter generously between slices. Wrap in foil and bake in moderate oven 375° F. 15 min. If loaf has been frozen, use a hot oven 450° F., or increase the time. Thin slices of cheese or onion may be inserted. This is a hearty accompaniment to a soup or salad.

Here we've used for all the jobs a Rotiss-o-mat (Rotiss-o-mat Corp., Long Island City, N. Y.).

Meaty Pizzas

Nothing could be swifter than the new pizza mixes which come complete with sauce. Follow package directions. Extra-rich and delicious are pizzas topped with slices of mozzarella or Muenster cheese and bordered with canned chopped beef, or canned chili con carne without beans.

Ready-baked or quick-frozen pizzas are made specially hearty with the addition of meat. To reheat pizza without drying out or overcooking the cheese, wrap loosely in aluminum foil and set in a hot oven 10 to 15 minutes.

Pizza, rolls and many other dishes—even cakes—bake beautifully in the Roto-Broil with the new Bak-A-Tray attachment (Jay Broiler Co., Long Island City, N. Y.).

Barbecued Beef Sandwiches

These belong to a great Amer-can tradition. When made with are. they can be marvelously good. Bread. meat and sauce should be lways hot-as-hot and served on eated plates.

All-purpose Barbecue Sauce

Very quick. very easy and excep-ionally tasty. Combine ¼ cup nelted butter or salad oil with 4 ablespoons tomato catsup, ¼ cup inegar or lemon juice, 1 teaspoon nion salt. 1 teaspoon celery salt. tablespoons brown sugar, 2 bouil-on cubes. 2 cups hot water, 3 or drops Tabasco. Bring to a boil. Simmer 5 min. Makes about 3 cups. Heat or toast bread or buns very ightly. Butter is not necessary. The auce is rich enough.

Slice 12 oz. chopped beef packed can. Add to sauce. Heat 1 or 2 minutes. Important not to overcook r the ready-to-eat meats will fall part. Serve open-faced sandwiches n heated plates with extra sauce n a heated bowl. Serves 6 to 7.

Barbecued Pork Sandwiches

Same recipe, but substitute uncheon meat for beef.

Barbecued Ham Sandwiches

Use ham or spiced ham loaf.

Ham and Egg Sandwiches

In one guise or another, they cover the country.

Denver Sandwich

Some call it "Western." Any number of different types of meat may be used. But you should al-ways include some fresh green pep-pers and some onions. To make 2 sandwiches use half of a 12-oz. can of luncheon meat, ham loaf or canned ham. Cut it into small cubes. Lightly brown in butter or bacon fat along with 1 onion and green pepper, both chopped. Stir in 4 eggs slightly beaten. Brown light-ly on both sides and serve between lightly toasted, well-buttered bread. You are sure to find it delicious.

You can have

French Doors and a Valance, too

French doors are a pleasure and joy until you try to figure a way to drape them in a formal and gracious manner. How to hang not only draperies but a valance too on a door that opens into the room? Many people give up, fasten the curtains to the frame, and then wonder why their French doors give the whole room a dowdy appearance.

You can easily have the same kind of drapery treatment you give the other windows in the room. Professional decorators have been solving this kind of problem for years, and you can see from the pictures below that French doors were no deterrent to decorators Howard and Barley.

They draped a handsome valance above satin hangings in this bedroom of the William Lasdons. Note below the cleverly thought-out rigging that permits the draperies and the valance to ride with the doors. Draperies never get caught in the doors. Closing of the doors restores perfect alignment of the draped valance.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY BILL JACKSON

See how completely normal this drapery treatment looks on the inward-swinging French door. Venetian blinds hang outside, are secured against flapping in the wind.

Attached to wall beyond door trim is hinged support for valance board to hold one panel of draperies and half of valance. Both move with door. Glass protects draperies.

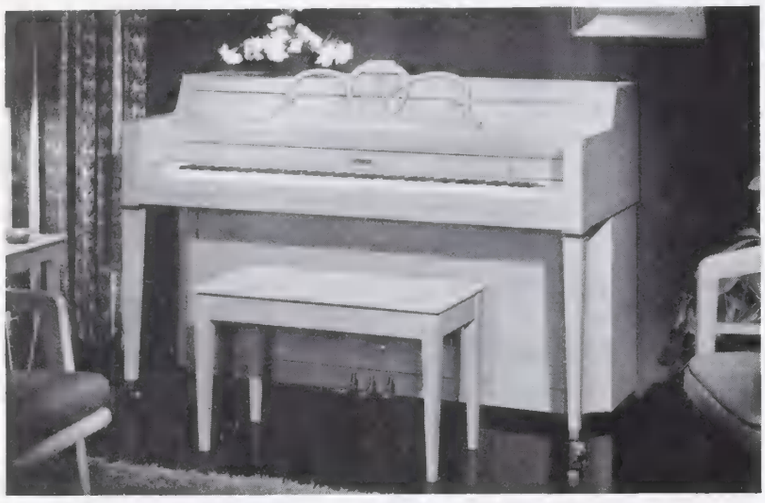
By CHARLOTTE CONWAY



Once a synonym for casual cooking, the chafing dish has come back, electrified and all prettied up for any kind of party. The Tricolator people make a handsome electric chafing dish of brass, a credit to any table or buffet. It has a thermostatic control to regulate heat up to 500 degrees. And it comes with an extra brass water pan, for double-boiler cooking or keeping food hot. You'll have no problems storing or cleaning it, and its uses will amaze you, especially if space and kitchen facilities are limited in your home.

If yours is a small family, or you bake only small quantities of food at a time, the West Bend electric Oven-ette will serve you well and save you money. It bakes and roasts like any range oven, can also be used for keeping foods hot for serving. Set the dial for any temperature from 150° to 450°. When the pilot light glows, desired temperature has been reached. Thermostat automatically controls temperature during baking period. Baking set (consisting of roasting, layer cake, and pie pans, and 7 muffin cups) comes with it.

No room for an extra working surface? Just install it in a base cabinet, pull it out when you want it, push it away when you don't. Kitchen Maid decided you might need a snack table, planning desk or sit-down work area, so they developed a glide assembly which can be ordered with or without a top. Top is 25" wide, 21" deep, 29¾" high, comfortable sitting height. Standard finish is gray Formica; special colors can be ordered. Despite pull-out table, there is generous storage space in cabinet beneath.

No need to lift heavy weights to do thorough cleaning jobs. Hoover has brought out a full-size vacuum cleaner that weighs under 15 pounds. Motor hood is a little over 5" high, will go under most furniture. Cleaner is equipped with disposable inner dirt container, so your hands need never touch dirt. Nozzle adjusts automatically for varying rug thicknesses. Cleaning tools are attached at the front, which makes it easy to tow the cleaner even with tools attached. Hose is flexible Veriflex, attachments are conventional.

DRAWINGS BY KELLY OESCHLI

Water softeners, though essential in so many parts of the country, often are resisted because they have not been handsome and so had to be concealed somewhere. Now Culligun has brought out a model styled to complement laundry equipment or counter-height water heaters, good-looking enough to grace kitchen or laundry. Table-top model is 20 1/16" wide x 27 7/16" deep and 36" high. Automatic regeneration controls are concealed beneath hinged lid. Electric timer returns unit to service when cycle is completed.

Drying delicate apparel like lingerie, blouses, hosiery need worry you no longer. The Rheem people make an automatic dryer, either gas or electric, with a special compartment above the conventional tumbler, which they have named the Clothes Saver compartment. Circulating air does the job, without damaging heat or tumbling motion. Warm air is clean, for it has to pass through a removable, washable filter before reaching the clothes. Dryer installs flush to wall, with vent exhaust at center or either side of dryer.

Maybe you are one of those who likes to see "what's cooking," and how it's cooking, too. Now you can do it, without stooping or interrupting other kitchen tasks. O'Keefe & Merritt have brought out a gas range with what they call a Hi-Vue oven. Secret is, it's really done with mirrors, something like a periscope. You can glance through the viewing window, which is at a convenient height, and see down into the entire oven compartment. Because you needn't open oven door, no heat or food odors escape, and kitchen stays cooler.

If you need organizing, the Westinghouse Food File refrigerator will do it for you. For foods go into the right place almost automatically. There's a meat keeper and a beverage-keeper drawer to keep Cokes, beer and such at the right serving temperature. Two of the shelves roll out and may be removed loaded with food for use as serving trays. Door has selected spots for two dozen eggs, bottles, cheese, snacks and fruit. Magic opener permits you to open the door, even when both hands are full, merely with a touch of the elbow.

Make the most of your coffee-maker

By JULIE POLSHEK

Brewing good coffee may not start and stop with the automatic coffee-maker, but it is by all odds the easiest, most convenient road to brewing success. Its precisely timed cycle is also the surest way to achieve peak brewing each and every time.

However fine the brew may be, with most people drinking pleasure falls short if coffee isn't served piping hot. With the automatic coffee-maker, thermostatic control provides a warming temperature the moment brewing is completed and assures a hot beverage from first cup to last.

For the crowning touch to coffee-drinking pleasure, nothing equals the super-rich flavor and aroma of coffee you grind just before use. Even with a hand-grinder, it's well worth the extra trouble involved; with grinders that operate electrically, it's done in a flash. Also with home-grinding, you get precisely the grind you fancy and can even create your own coffee blends.

Don't overlook the valuable aid a refrigerator's cold gives in prolonging the fresh-packed flavor and aroma of commercially-ground or store-ground coffee. Storing an opened can or jar at room temperature rapidly dissipates coffee's perishable oils and savor. The flavor of a brew is often blamed on the brewing when the real trouble stems from coffee that has, through improper or overlong storage, acquired an "off" taste or lost its essential oils.

Coffee-makers are also unjustly blamed for an inferior brew. Sometimes the coffee itself is the trouble spot, but usually the trouble can be traced to the fact that the coffee-maker hasn't been kept free of the residual deposit left by a coffee's oils. Even an invisible trace of residue can taint the flavor of a brew perceptibly. Residual deposit isn't removed by washing, however thorough you may be; and resorting to abrasive cleansing can, over a period of time, damage the metal's finish. An especially effective cleansing medium, widely used by institutions, restaurants and the servicing agencies of electric coffee-makers, is a perborate compound called CSR. It cleans chemically by an oxygen action that does an exceedingly thorough job and by a work-free method. You simply put the coffee-maker through its brewing cycle, using Electrical outlets, provided in many serving carts, make it possible to keep the coffee-maker within reach without congesting table area. Streamlined percolator by Presto, like other de luxe coffee-makers, is adjustable for desired brewing strength.

the cleansing powder in a water-solution. This treatment at the same time combats the residual deposit left after each brewing use by the lime content of water. An accumulated lime deposit can impair the effectiveness of a coffee-maker's heating element and thus slow down the brewing cycle.

Many authoritative sources frown on the use of soaps for cleansing a coffee-maker. They're said to leave a residue that could taint brewing flavor and accumulatively, with porous metals, the residue may penetrate the surface.

Accurate measurements of coffee and water, as has often been said, are a "must" for brewing success. And if you value a good cup of coffee, you'll make sure that the water used is freshly drawn from the cold-water tap. The ratio of coffee to water is, of course, a matter of personal preference and easily ascertained after using a coffee-maker a few times. When you find the desired ratio, be consistent in adhering accurately to it. Bear in mind also, if you're given to switching coffee brands, that their bulk per pound may differ considerably. With vacuum-packed coffees, you can tell by simply comparing the relative sizes of the cans. Bear in mind, too, that some brands are blended to give a light-bodied brew, others a heavy-bodied brew, still others lie somewhere in between. These degrees of flavor intensity, which you come to know from use, aren't to be confused with the strength of the brew. Brewing strength, with an automatic coffee-maker is a controlled factor, but where flavor intensity is concerned, it's up to you to choose the coffee blend best suited to the flavor quality which you and your family prefer.

If you're about to acquire a coffee-maker, you'll find that more attention is being given to styling to make it compatible with fine table appointments. Functionally, there are numerous new refinements. Some make for far more rapid brewing than in the past, some for greater selectivity as to brewing strength. There are new developments that enhance a coffee-maker's usefulness by broadening the span between minimum and maximum brewing possibilities. There are refinements in design that safeguard the heating element should water accidently come into contact with it. Spouts are being designed to give dripless pouring.

The many factors that make some coffee-makers more efficient than others or make a higher price warranted are for the most part not discernible matters when you shop and are too complex to explain here. But you can check on such matters as a seamless interior construction, the weightiness of the metal used for the body. In a vacuum-type coffee-maker, make ure the decanter's gasket affords he tight seal important to this rewing method. In percolator-type offee-makers, a stem that's equipped for valve action makes for naximum control of the water umping. For the most part, a deep offee basket produces the maximum brewing efficiency. It's pertinent to add also that attempting o go below the designated minimum batch specified in the manufacturer's instructions will give you orry results.

Party needs are easily met with the 24-48 cup brewing range of West Bend's coffee urn. It brews by drip method. The switch-controlled heating element has a setting for brewing and one for keeping coffee hot.

The new imports that brew demiasse types of coffee in a matter of seconds aren't automatic, but they merit mention here because they're trail-blazers so far as home use is concerned. The more elaborate of these brewing machines provides an auxiliary hot-water spout as well as a steam jet for liquefying powdered coffee, cocoa or the like.

There's never been such a wealth of coffee-maker types to choose from. Intrinsic efficiency is at a high level and, if you mind the p's and q's that contribute to the best brewing flavor, you'll find that making good coffee is an easy and enjoyable art.

A coffee-grinding attachment can be had that fits any Hamilton-Beach electric mixer. Unground coffee can be stored in the jar of the attachment. Coffee-maker by Knapp-Monarch is vacuum type, makes 2 to 10 cups.

Delft coffee grinder from Holland is a manual type designed for wall mounting; most decorative, and its grinding mechanism is top-drawer. Universal Coffee-matic can be had in this contemporary model or a model that has traditional styling.

Matching coffee service and coffee-maker are available in Farberware. They're traditionally styled and made of chromed solid brass. Coffee-maker affords very rapid brewing and can be used to brew as little as one cup of coffee if so desired.

Many operational improvements are to be found in newly developed coffee-makers. The new Westinghouse percolator, for example, has been well engineered and designed to make for very rapid and very efficient extraction of the coffee oils.

MELANIE KAHANE, a leader in the use of color, used only fabrics of Du Pont nylon in decorating her own lovely living room.

Every fabric in this room is made of easy-care Du Pont Nylon

It's a luxurious room . . . a casual room . . . a practical room because every fabric shown is made of Du Pont nylon. That means, whether the fabric has a soft velvet texture . . . a crisp taffeta finish . . . is a novel damask or a deep-pile carpeting, it is wonderfully easy to care for, long-wearing, beautiful. Look for glamorous, practical home furnishings of Du Pont nylon in your favorite store.

DAMASK, introduced to the western world by Marco Polo, takes its name from Damascus, a historical center for the weaving of beautiful fabrics. The damask used on the sofa and shown in this close-up is a far different fabric from that of Marco Polo's day. This damask is as beautiful as ever and, in addition, is amazingly practical, because it is made of easy-care Du Pont nylon.

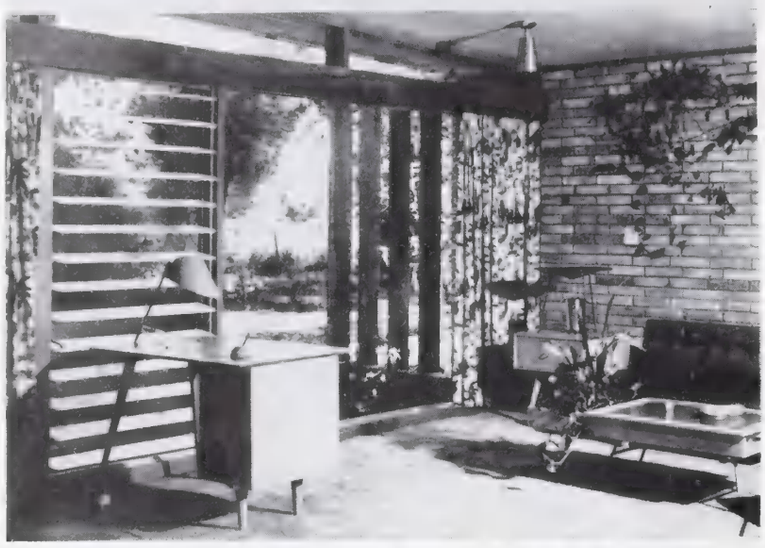
What to do about Bedspread Wrinkles

Wrinkles in a bedspread and/or constant pressing are the bête noir of any scrupulous housekeeper. Yet both pristine freshness and glamour are possible with little effort if, first, the fabric is right and, second, a proper off-the-bed storage is provided. Choose lightweight weaves, quilted fabrics, new embossed nylons or dimensional prints whose texture or design conceals or absorbs stray creases. Or use an ornamental rack (see below), or a drapery pole in a closet over which to lay the coverlet. This attention takes minutes, adds years to the life of the spread, preserves that much-desired well-groomed look.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY WILLIAM HOWLAND



This bedspread is made of new embossed nylon, easily washable, quick-drying. Should it wrinkle, creases merge into puffed design. Such a spread handles easily, is light to fold and store, always stays groomed and pretty.

In Japan this decorative hanger is used to keep a kimono wrinkle-free. Here it supports an easy-to-crease, ruffled chintz spread. Also ideal is an old-fashioned standing towel rack. Pahlmann Previews has this hanger.

Sound of falling water requires only an inexpensive recirculating pump and an artificial waterfall of as little as a foot. Woodland setting is ideal place for growing wildflowers and ferns. Designed for Burpee Seed Company for the New York Flower Show.

GARDEN IDEAS

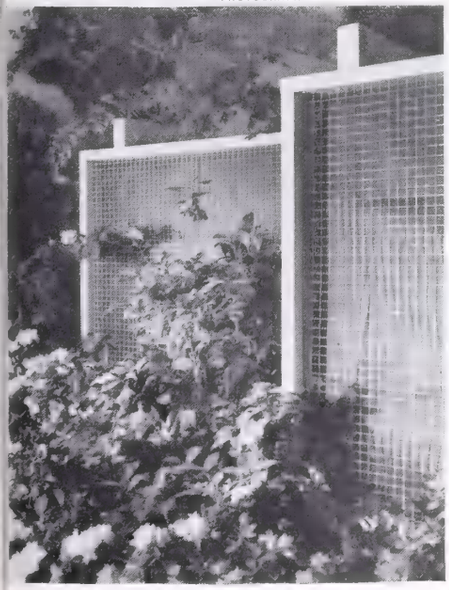
1954 LOS ANGELES FLOWER SHOW

Tulips and daffodils should be used in big masses for greatest effectiveness. Stick to one variety, not mixed colors. Plant tulips 6 inches apart, dig up each year after foliage turns yellow, replant in September. This garden designed for Germain's.

1954 NEW YORK FLOWER SHOW

Split stones for paths should be 3 or 4 inches thick and well seated in gravel or cinders. Birch trees should be planted in clumps of 3 to 7, keeping all roots close together in one hole to insure natural-clump look.

Bonsai training of trees to keep them tiny soon brings the problem of how to display your collection. This shadow-box fence arrangement sets off each plant, yet complements whole collection, provides privacy as well.



ALL PHOTOGRAPHED AT THE 1954 LOS ANGELES FLOWER SHOW

Backgrounds can flatter your plants importantly if chosen with skill. This is a combination of bamboo and plastic strips woven together.

Brick wall is key here to superb job of making a tiny area impressive and thoroughly useful. Note how it and brick paving curve, fooling your eyes as to the real depth involved. Brick wall doubles as seat wall. Designed by Allen Dalsimer for Dalsimer, Inc., landscape nurserymen.

Outlining terrace, here with loosely clipped Taxus, immediately increases its importance in the over-all design. Exit step to garden is essential. It is frustrating to be within a few feet of a garden and yet unable to get into it. Exhibit of Bobbink & Atkins, landscape nurserymen.

3 GARDENS PHOTOGRAPHED BY GOTTSCHO-SCHLEISNER AT NEW YORK FLOWER SHOW

Raised terrace walled with Hatfield's yews provides sitting area with view down to flowers. Yew offers security at terrace edge without resort to fence or other architectural device.

Grouping cacti loosely duplicates the way they grow in their native desert home. Here they are growing in a 3-inch bed of clean sand (never seashore sand!) atop regular garden soil. Rain drains away quickly, an essential for success with cacti.

GARDENS FROM THE LOS ANGELES FLOWER SHOW

Birches and similar trees can be heavily underplanted with tulips and daffodils without injury to them or the trees. Bulbs bloom and have all their leaf growth before midsummer when tree shade gets dense. Germain's exhibit.

Garden stocks, also called wallflowers, are old-fashioned but thoroughly satisfactory when massed as here before a good windbreak of evergreens (best also to stake them inconspicuously). Must be started early indoors because they must be big enough to blossom before summer heat arrives. Exhibited by Germain's.

5 GARDENS FROM THE LOS ANGELES FLOWER SHOW

Sunshade here is made from pipe bent to form "petals" that are canvas-covered, replaces conventional umbrella. Tricks like this are fine as long as result is appropriate to location and use. Designed for the Armstrong Nurseries.

Reflecting pools needn't be deep or expensive to build. You need only a couple of inches of water, concrete, copper or lead lining. But be sure plants overhang the water for full reflection.

RALPH ■ SMITH LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT

Pebble bottom for pool is handsome, requires only inch-deep covering on regular concrete bottom. Big stones here help catch your eye, especially important because background fence is so striking.

3 GARDENS FROM THE LOS ANGELES FLOWER SHOW

Calendulas are not used as often as they should be. Only trick is to mass them, preferably close to a path so you can look down on them (they face directly up to sun). This exhibit won the special New York Show medal at the Los Angeles show for Germain's.

Tree boxes are valuable for their design value as well as life-savers for the trees when soil must be cut down in landscaping. Here tree box has been fitted naturally into high garden wall, creating important garden feature from what started out to be a real liability.

RALPH W. SMITH, LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT

Plant containers offer a real chance to try your hand at creative designing. They must be practical, rugged, and not too ornate for the plant (must flatter the plant, not steal the show). This is in redwood, with mitered corners and short, heavy feet. Note succulent soil cover.

This little garden looks BIG

Plants, play space, guest house and garage all fit easily into the rear of this 100-foot lot

Space is illusive, particularly out-of-doors. Similar-size plots of land may seem open and airy with plenty of room, or cluttered and confining with limited uses. The effect in your own yard depends entirely upon how you use the space at your disposal.

This little garden looks big. Actually, it's an average suburban back yard. But organization of work and play areas into rectangular units that fit snugly together provides separate space for the family's various activities, so that each is shielded from sight and sound of the others. Restrained planting and horizontal lines help extend boundary lines.

Stepping-stone path of brick begins at driveway and passes through this gate to private garden beyond. Area is completely shut off from the adjoining play yard. Note bold checker design on outer expanse of wall.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

From within garden, closed gate becomes part of wall which, with house and garden house, encloses area. Fence and garden house are unified by identical color and construction.

Strong horizontal lines on inner side of fence seem to extend boundaries of garden. Small trees and restrained ground plantings also help make garden seem larger than it really is.

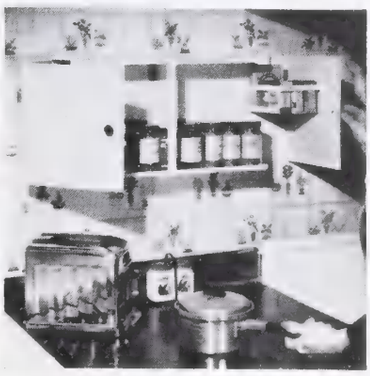
From Georg Jensen, 667 Fifth Ave., New York, N. Y.



When you can get crushed ice right out of the freezing tray, there's new incentive to use this means of keeping juices, salads or other foods thoroughly chilled. MODERN INDOOR PLANTS

By MARY NOBLE

Philodendron Verrucosum

Philodendron verrucosum is as colorful as a gypsy and as glamorous as a plant can be.

The leaves are like forest green velvet, veined prominently with bright olive green, and colored salmon-purple on the back. The red stems are covered with green fuzz that is quite attractive.

This is a big-leaved vine that requires support—here a totem of cork tree bark adds interest. If you have a setting that calls for a spectacular plant, choose this one. P. verrucosum needs to stand alone as a dramatic accent. Its beauty should not be wasted in a group planting where it can't be seen.

Water the roots thoroughly twice a week and feed monthly with liquid plant food. This is one indoor plant that should be encouraged to grow as large as possible: don't skimp on food or water.

Variegated Monstera

Almost everybody knows Monstera, a favorite indoor plant the world over. Its rare variegated form, though, is a connoisseur's dream. The leaves have the familiar indentations, but are strikingly marked with cream and several shades of green.

Like the species, it grows tall and needs support. The new leaves come out green and then develop color which becomes more pronounced as foliage matures. This is an extremely exotic plant for a large room. It grows in light or shade and stands temperature extremes above freezing. Plants should be watered thoroughly about once a week and fed every month. Sponge the dust from the foliage frequently.

Alocasia Amazonica

Alocasias are glorified relatives of Elephant Ears and caladiums, and are very desirable house plants because of their elegant appearance and liking for shade.

Alocasia amazonica has beautiful dark, shiny ivy green leaves veined with gray-white. It is a hybrid between Lowii-grandis and Sanderiana. All Alocasias should be kept warm and damp—never below 60° even at night, so plants must be used where heat is constant. The best potting medium is live sphagnum moss and pea gravel, or a loose mixture of peat and sand. It is helpful to place the pot on a saucer of damp sand. Feed with a liquid plant food as each new leaf develops.

Alocasias grow to mammoth size under greenhouse conditions. Indoor plants are generally 18 to 24 inches tall in four- or five-inch pots, but larger specimens are available if your space permits.

Self-Heading Philodendrons

In the past few years the self-heading Philodendrons have become extremely popular indoor plants. They have the stamina of the climbing types but are much easier to use because of their compact shape. They grow in sun or shade, warm or cool temperatures, tolerate air conditioning.

Philodendron Melinoni is a newly introduced Brazilian species with wide leaves on short stems, giving it a stocky appearance that is extremely useful in decoration. Large specimens are effective in hotels and business buildings, smaller sizes for home use.

Philodendron cannifolium is a smaller, slow-growing species which has leaves about a foot long on fat bulb-like stems the same length. It retains its size and shape for a long period and does not outgrow a given location. It does best in shade.

The self-heading Philodendrons will be in short supply until sufficient stock is grown from seed.

hat it does have a two-lens turret. By sizing up the scene and presetting each lens, it is possible to have a quick change between distance and medium shots. This turns out to be particularly important to Pete in his filming of airplanes. With the telescopic lens he can take clear close-up pictures of skybound planes in motion.

Pete is far from self-sufficient with the movie camera. His father loads the film and checks the exposure and speed for each shot. But he has explained a lot to Pete, about the principles of motion picture photography, and Pete understands them quite well. Both father and son have their own still cameras, too—Pete's is a reflex Brownie for black-and-white pictures, and his father's recently acquired Leica is mainly for color stills. Interestingly enough, the family is taking more stills now than they did before they started movies. The more pictures they take the more they want to take.

Why shouldn't it be as much fun for children to take pictures as it is for them to look at those someone else has taken? And movie-making is a mighty good skill to have. As in tennis, or typing, or rowing a boat, learning can begin whenever the child is ready.

A great deal can be gained by the parents in giving a youthful offspring the supervised use of a movie camera. A certain amount of family unity and warmth comes out of (and goes into) the sharing and the learning that takes place. "And believe me," Pete's mother adds, "you learn a lot from the child." For one thing, she points out, children's powers of observation are strikingly different from those of adults. Often they are fresh and fascinating. Even a three-year-old finds interest in things we're likely to ignore. Too often adults squelch those childhood powers. A camera provides one way of helping the child retain his interest in all the things around him. It helps him cultivate special interests in those which appeal to him. It also helps adults become more aware of, and attentive to, the child's interests.

Many a family trip can be "saved" by the camera. For a youngster who might otherwise become tired and cranky, picture-taking is an important stimulant. Even a Sunday afternoon trip to the zoo can be pleasanter, if the older children are given their choice of spots to visit, and scenes to photograph. My friend tells me that her family outings are not just for the typical sights. They include visits to New York's busy docks watching the men at work on freighters and ferry boats, to the city's yacht basin and famous fish market. "We see all kinds of interesting things," she told me. "Not just the children—but all of us. And we feel that these expeditions with cameras help our family see and appreciate 'strange' things that go on every day in the world around us."

The high point of a recent trip to Washington was Pete's visit to Bolling Air Base. After driving through the unrestricted areas, the family debarked not more than 50 yards from the take-off strip. Pete was able to get moving pictures of one plane after another taxiing up, turning around, starting the run and finally rising into the sky. It gave him a wonderful variety of angles of each plane. The rest of the family stood behind the cameraman waving to the pilots, some of whom waved back. It was the thrill of a young lifetime. What's even better, Pete has the movies at home now and he'll be enjoying them for a long time to come.

MODERN INDOOR PLANTS

Aglaonema Pictum

Here is an extremely attractive form of the Chinese Evergreen. It is just as easy to grow as the ordinary plain species. The dark green leaves are marked with gray and white patches in the center, and so this variety makes a good accent plant in a gray decoration scheme.

This plant grows one to two feet tall. It need not be near a window as it tolerates both the shade and dryness of average homes and offices. Grow in moderately rich soil, keep warm (above 50°), and water thoroughly about every five days. Sponge the foliage at the same time to remove the dust.

Seersucker Plant

Dichorisandra mosaica undata is the hard way of saying Seersucker Plant—an attractive new dwarf house plant that is a Peruvian relative of the Wandering Jew.

The average plant is about six inches tall, compact in growth, and good-looking from the top. It is an ideal plant for the coffee table. The waved foliage has longitudinal light and dark green bands shading into black. The undersides of the leaves are in a rich maroon, as are the stems.

The Seersucker Plant likes to be warm (65°), grown in peat and loam, and to have more water in summer than in winter. Plants are inexpensive and easily propagated from cuttings.

Episcia

The current craze for Episcias threatens to become as widespread and enduring as that for African violets. Episcias are also Gesneriads, easy to grow and needing the same conditions as the Saintpaulias. The exotic foliage introduces new color tones in house plants. Most varieties have small red tubular flowers, but the leaves are the chief attraction.

Acajou is a new variety that is predominantly silver edged with brown velvet, with lavender tints on the back of the leaves.

Episcias must be warm (above 60°), damp at the roots, and shaded. To do justice to their drooping habit, plants are best grown in hanging baskets or wall planters. New plants are frequently produced on runners, and may be allowed to remain—or be cut off and potted separately.

Apply water at the roots about twice a week and feed monthly with liquid plant food, but do not wash the hairy foliage. If dust collects, remove gently with a soft brush to avoid leaf injury.

Other new varieties of Episcia are Chocolate Soldier, Frosty, and Emerald Gem.

Painted Feather

The Painted Feather is a plant of pale lime green with a startling red and yellow spike which turns it into a living vase all winter long.

Being a bromeliad, the Painted Feather (Vriesia carinata hybrid Marie) is a most amenable houseplant. If water is kept in the hollow center, the plant won't dry out. Water should be given at the roots about once a week as well. Plants are grown in porous peat, leafmold and sand, or in osmunda fiber such as used for orchids.

This plant grows under almost any indoor conditions—light, filtered light, or shade, and can be cool but not frozen. The exotic spike of bracts is colorful from November to April, and the foliage alone is attractive the rest of the year. Minute unimportant flowers pop out from the edges of the feather. After flowering, the plant gradually deteriorates as the new generation matures.

Bromeliads have been grown in Europe for years, and have a wonderful future in this country because of their ease of culture. These plants look most exotic and are sure to be conversation pieces. But they are ridiculously easy to grow. Do try painted feather or one of the other bromeliads.

Dieffenbachia Hoffmani

This is one of the most sought after of all Dieffenbachias. It was discovered many years ago but the original stand has not been located again. The foliage is extremely attractive, irregularly marked with white and cream spots. It can be used alone or in a planter bin.

Like other Dieffenbachias, it will eventually grow tall. The top can be cut off and rooted, and additional plants grown from the low and center parts of the stem.

D. Hoffmani doesn't like to be chilled, but grows in sun or shade providing the sun is not strong enough to scorch the foliage. There are several common varieties of Dieffenbachias. This one is for collectors, well worth searching for

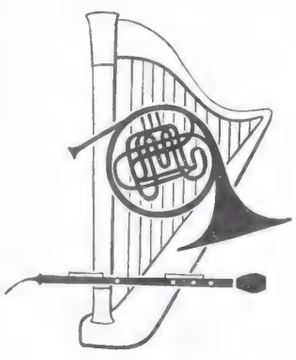
For the new work Diaghilev chose Nijinsky as the choreographer. The new subject was elemental, though hardly elementary, a challenge to the great dancer as well as the composer. Seeking his source in universal legend, Stravinsky wanted to express in music the rebirth of nature after the fallow winter. He wished the music to speak of natural forces, of the earth turning in its sleep, of the vitality that lies in a plant pushing through the hard rind of the soil. And with it, as accompaniment to Nature and part of it, he wished to write of the regeneration of human life, of its cruel self-preservation through the sacrifice of the individual, of birth through slaughter.

Primitive people and their rituals are the protagonists of this composition. It deals with the dawn of history or rather with the history of dawn. But it is composed in a style which is the very opposite of primitive and which was in 1913 the last word in musical sophistication, the last assault on the classical ear, the last tightening of nervous tension.

THE first performance took place on May 29, 1913, in the Théâtre des Champs-Elysees. Pierre Monteux conducted. Almost immediately fierce protests broke out all over the theater. During the introduction laughter was heard. It increased as the ballet itself began. People started to whistle, to shout insults at the performers and at the composer. The noise increased. Monteux looked for guidance toward Diaghilev, who sat in one of the boxes. The director made signs to him to keep on playing. The noise became so loud that one could not hear the music. The lights were turned on. Individual fist fights began in various parts of the house. One elegant lady seated in a box stood up and slapped the face of a man who was hissing in the next box. The old Comtesse de Pourtales, one of the first-nighters of Paris, waved her fan and cried, "This is the first time in sixty years that any one has dared to mock me."



In the section called "Rite of the Ancestors," the figure of the chosen victim was supposed to be seized by a fit of trembling. At that, people in the audience called for "un docteur . . . un dentiste . . . deux docteurs." The whole scene was summed up by Carl Van Vechten:

"A certain part of the audience was thrilled by what it considered to be a blasphemous attempt to destroy music as an art, and, swept away with wrath, began, very soon after the rise of the curtain, to make cat-calls and to offer audible suggestions as to how the performance should proceed. The orchestra played unheard, except occasionally when a slight lull occurred. The young man seated behind me in the box stood up during the course of the ballet to enable himself to see more clearly. The intense excitement under which he was laboring betrayed itself presently when he began to beat rhythmically on the top of my head with his fists. My emotion was so great that I did not feel the blows for some time."

What was it that offended the audience so outrageously? Was it the music or was it the ballet or both? It is probable that at least part of the offense was due to the ballet, though with many retellings of the story of the premiere it has become customary to attribute the malady of the audience to the music itself.

Was the music, then, so incomprehensible at first hearing that one could not bear to listen to any of it? I wonder. Only eleven months after the ballet's performance, Monteux conducted another performance of The Rite, this time in a concert hall without choreography. He showed remarkable courage in doing so; we may imagine his trepidation as he stepped on the podium and raised the baton for the introduction, and the slow, slithering theme played by a single bassoon was heard. The result of this performance was a success as brilliant as the protest had been violent.

We must consider both performances together in order to evaluate properly the impact of the work. We must speak of TWO Rites of Spring, one with and one without dancing. We must then report the quick and decided success of the composition all over the world. We must conclude that audiences were not so wrong as we usually give them discredit for.

No doubt that the music was altogether new and frightening. But one could bear it; it was worth the fright, and one was fascinated. It was that unfortunate ballet, all too graphic and therefore all too ridiculous, that caused the accident. I make the point because I believe that great music is more quickly recognized by the public than we generally suppose.

EVEN in conservative America (conservative in those days) Sacre was immediately hailed as a unique and tremendous work. It was first played here by the Philadelphia Orchestra under the direction of Stokowski in 1922. Two years later Monteux played it with the Boston Symphony. Today every orchestra large enough to cast the requirements of the score plays the work. To play it, a very large orchestra is required. In addition to the usual orchestration, the score calls for eight horns, four kettledrums, cymbals, antique cymbals, a "rape" (a Spanish instrument), and so forth.

Many of the themes of The Rite of Spring are based on folk songs. (What Russian music is not?) In one section of the work, "Dance of the Mysterious Circles," you can hear these folk songs quite plainly, and it is in this section that a certain sentimental simplicity invades the music, which, to be sure, is soon broken into by the barbaric "Glorification of the Chosen One." It is not, however, in its themes that the distinction of the composition lies. Its fascination is to be sought chiefly in the marvelously vivid orchestration and in the rhythms. These are ever-changing and frantic beyond belief. They hammer at our nerves and produce what one critic has called "a feeling of panic."

The work consists of two major sections, The Adoration of the Earth and The Sacrifice. Each section has a number of subtitles, serving as guides for the choreography. It is possible to ignore them and to listen to the composition as music without program or explanations. As such and in spite of some reservations we can make, it remains a masterpiece, the hearing of which is still an experience. In its way, the way of the large orchestra, it has not been surpassed. Music took a smaller course after this gargantuan outburst. The Rite of Spring is the culmination of an ever-growing orchestral conception, loaded with color and bizarre in instrumentation, which had been growing up through Wagner, Strauss, and the early Schoenberg.

Stravinsky, at least the Stravinsky of The Rite of Spring, has become a classic. Recently the London Philharmonic Society awarded him its Gold Medal, a distinction which in the past has been awarded to such conservatives as Brahms, Elgar, and Rachmaninoff.

Invite Songbirds to your Home

"Lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone: the flowers appear on the earth: the time of the singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land."

So sang Solomon to his beloved. And so sing we to you, dear reader.

Three things have inspired us to bring songbirds to your notice: We heard our first cuckoo last spring, we have just read John K. Terres's new, sensitive book, Songbirds in Your Garden, and we recently had the pleasure of hearing two people cry when they listened to Cornell University's long-playing record release, Voices of the Night.

Taking the last thing first: One evening not so long ago we played Cornell's recording of frogs, toads and tree frogs (the "voices of the night") for two French girls who are staying with us. When the record had spun to the place where little spring peepers lifted their notes of high beauty, punctuated occasionally by the trill of a tree toad and later by the banjo-twang of a green frog, the two girls had added the soft patter of their own tears. It all reminded them of their native villages, so long ago and far away. (The sounds affecting them so deeply were actually recorded in Ithaca, New York!)

I have never heard the voice of the turtle (off the Broadway stage), but the voices of some of the toads on the Cornell record sound as pure as the whippoorwill's. There is also a basso profundo of a southern bullfrog whose voice carries like a drumbeat in the night.

But my favorite recording is the latest Cornell University disk, The Mockingbird. It should be called Two Mockingbirds, for there are two of these polyglot mimics (Latin name: Mimus polyglottos) who, between them, imitate more than thirty other songbirds, besides warbling their own native wood-notes wild. From barn swallow to yellowbreasted chat, from bluebird to veery and wood thrush, including the English sparrow and a whole flock of bluejays—all these songs pour from the throat of a single mockingbird, lately on a farm near Weston, Massachusetts. No wonder this operatic stand-in is the state bird of six states.

However, if you prefer to drink in the pure, unmixed, unimitated music of American songbirds, Cornell University has that also on records. There is, as well, Cornell's plastic platter, with spoken comment, of Florida Bird Songs.

But even more trilling to us than bird songs in your living room are songbirds in your garden. To have held a bird and let it fly, as one poet has expressed it, to have eavesdropped on the fragmentary conversations among feathered friends, to have helped one fainting robin unto his nest again, as other poets have written (do you recognize these authors?)—are all experiences way beyond words or records; they are first-hand contact with the elemental heartbeat of creation that alone quickens yours.

EVEN the English Sparrow, muddy, "mean and small," is liked by some, "the best of all." God too must have liked the sparrow, because he made so many of them. "I once had a sparrow alight upon my shoulder for a moment," Thoreau wrote in Walden, "while I was hoeing in a village garden, and I felt that I was more distinguished by that circumstance than I should have been by any epaulet I could have worn."

There is one sparrow I shall never forget. It's a sparrow shot with an air rifle; it lay at my seven-year-old feet and quietly bled its life away. (I've done no shooting or fishing since that day, and I never will. To watch the sparrow's fall is no triumph, no pleasure.)

But death occurs naturally in nature and, ironically, those who invite birds to their gardens must prepare for the fact that they also invite their destruction by hawks and shrikes and other birds of prey, attracted by their presence. Nothing in the book we mentioned above, Songbirds in Your Garden, by John K. Terres, so impressed us as his words on this sad truth:

"When you feed birds in your garden," he writes, "this phenomenon—that one bird, a hawk or a shrike, must kill another bird to keep life in its own body—may be the hardest for you to accept. If you don't accept it, your enjoyment of birds for what they are—free, wild, uninhibited creatures—will be less and your breadth of view narrowed.

"I shall not ask you to harden your feelings against the death of birds in your garden, even if that were possible for you. I shall ask you to look on predatory birds as creatures which are living as nature has directed them to live, and to realize that the action of the hawk, which strikes down a sparrow at your feeder, is no different from that of the sparrow itself, which only a moment before killed a beetle to satisfy its own hunger.

"To live is to die, and one creature in your garden lives only until that day that it must give up its life to another—for another. Like the tides that roll upon an ocean beach, the lives of birds in your back yard will ebb and flow. But life—a rich, fascinating, varied life—will always be with you while your trees, shrubs, food, and water are there to say Come and live with us! to the songbirds in your garden."

Happily and properly, almost all the pages of Mr. Terres's book teach you how to invite songbirds to your garden by providing them with food, water and shelter—not only shelter from the elements, but protection from the hawks and shrikes attracted by the birds attracted by you.

WRITTEN clearly and warmly, in terms of anecdote and personal witness, Songbirds in Your Garden answers every question we can think of: the food to feed and the birdhouses to build, what drinks and baths, how to attract hummingbirds, the care and feeding of baby birds, the choice of proper plants and sounds, how to help at nesting time, the geography of birds, what else to read about birds if this book isn't enough to fully nourish your new interest.

One thing is sure about the Terres book, and Edwin Way Teale has said it: "It is a long step ahead from songbirds served on the table or songbirds imprisoned in cages."

Wonderful week ends

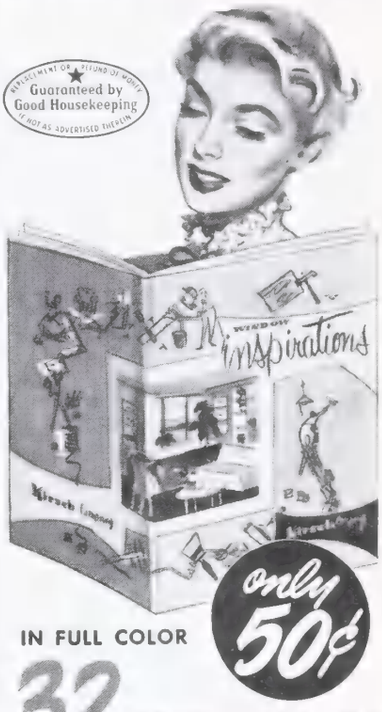
If you've already used up your 1954 vacation time, but still feel like going places, then the packaged week end may be just the package for you. Particularly, for a week's worth in a week-end fall outing, examine the latest in big-city packages. On most of them a minimum two days and one night, with sight-seeing and such features as theatre tickets and a spot of night life, which will cost you around $20. And just to indicate their variety: New York is yours on the Capital Airlines' already famous Week End at the Waldorf, high spot of which is a dine-and-dance evening in the Empire Room.

The Washington package set up by the Sheraton-Carlton Hotel comes with or without sight-seeing, makes no extra room charge for children.

A Saturday-morning-to-Sunday-night quickie engineered by the Canadian National Railways from Montreal shows you all of Ottawa, with overnight at the Chateau Laurier.

You can do Pittsburgh on a week-end tour set up by the Allegheny Airlines and the Sheraton Hotel.

And Capital again offers you New Orleans on tours as brief as a single day, if you are really pressed for time.



New and different

It's easy this year to plan a West Indies trip that is spiced with innovations. Only a little investigation will provide you with: A new hotel—among them Nassau's Emerald Beach, scheduled to be open in time for a winter visit. It has three hundred rooms, specializes in ocean views, is completely air conditioned, provides both an enormous white sand beach and a salt water pool with a Beach Club serving refreshments at both, promises exceptionally fine food and, for after-dark glamour, a lively Jubilee Room. Inquire locally of your travel agent or the William P. Wolfe Organization, hotel representatives.

A new trip—like the packaged all-expense out-on-the-island drive-yourself trips now quite the thing in Puerto Rico, which has always had much to see, but has only recently modernized and plainly marked the three thousand miles of highway from which to see it.

And a new island—Bonaire, only forty miles east of Curaçao in the Netherlands West Indies, with half-hour flights to and fro each day, and hitherto strangely neglected by the tourist. Information: the Netherlands West Indies Tourist Bureau, 475 Fifth Avenue, New York 17.

On credit

There seems to be a growing conviction that we should never, never put off doing today the travel we can pay for tomorrow. Or perhaps you had not realized just how much traveling you can do these days on credit. Western Airlines' new Charge-a-Flight plan is a step toward easing the deposit requirements on the credit card offered by many individual transportation companies for use on their own systems. Pan American World Airways' Pay-Later Plan now lets you get a Clipper ticket for a mere down payment: $56 to Paris; $21.40 for a Caribbean Circle; $25 for Hawaii; $64.40 for Rome, with up to a year to pay off the balance. The new Scandinavian Airlines System's Signature Travel Plan—limited as yet to people living or working in New York City, but due for expansion—covers travel, hotel bills, meals, side-trips, even extra cash in pocket for clothing, luggage, and shopping, with twelve, eighteen, or twenty-four months to pay. And a new Traveler's Credit Service, set up by leading executives in travel, makes available through your travel agent, for $15, a membership card that permits you to "charge it" in leading shops, restaurants, clubs and car-hire headquarters in eleven European countries.

Innocents in New York

Parents who say they'd rather be beaten than take their young on another motor trip just don't know about New York State's power to enchant the teenage-and-under traveler with enticements like this:

Lollipop Farm, at Syosset, Long Island, where candy does actually grow in the trees and the kids can see all kinds of animals.

Frontier Town near Schroon Lake, paradise for aspiring cowboys, has a costumed populace faithfully acting out the usual highlights of life in the Old West.

Old MacDonald's Farm, at Lake Placid, where your city-bred brood can have a wonderful time watching cows being milked, eggs hatching, bees making honey.

The Catskills Game Farm, near Cairo, gives even the youngest and most timid the safe excitement of feeding and petting the baby animals.

And if these are old stuff to your well-traveled offspring, send for the 1954 edition of New York's beautifully done State Vacationlands, free from the New York State Department of Commerce, 112 State Street, Albany 7. It lists these new attractions for the young:

The Land of Make Believe, at Jay, near Lake Placid, where Peter Pumpkin-Eater and the Three Bears live, and a miniature train takes off regularly for Cactus Flats, a child-size Wild West town.

Rip's Retreat, at Haines Falls in the Catskills, which not only recreates Washington Irving's famous tale, but sends out Rip Van Winkle and his dog, Wolf, to greet visitors in person.

The Children's Storybook Garden of Roses, at Newark, N. Y., in the heart of the rose-growing country that's worth a visit whether you're six or sixty.

Best of Bermuda

Changes have been made at Bermuda's well-loved old St. George Hotel. Resplendent in fresh paint, new furniture, new equipment and such sprightly innovations as a Nighthawk's Grill, where you can fix your own scrambled eggs after hours, it's yours to enjoy on a series of summertime escorted tours.

Ask your travel agent about the Colonial Airlines Skycruiser Tours. They leave New York twice a week through October 28, give you seven days and six nights in Bermuda for just $198 plus tax, or eight days and seven nights for $210. This covers air fare, all meals except luncheon the day you depart for home, and a sparkling program of entertainment that ranges from moonlight sails to swizzle parties.

Nice to know

- The Eastern Steamship Line's "S.S. Yarmouth," which leaves Boston on the overnight trip to Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, three times each week all summer and welcomes aboard both you and your car, will be doing it later than usual this year. It's final return trip: September 19.
- The Greyhound Lines now have "sleepover services" on their Overland bus routes between Chicago and St. Louis and San Francisco, so you spend your nights comfortably in good hotels and see all the scenery by daylight.
- Those fabulous Florida and Caribbean summer package trips, some of them actually good for a 40 per cent saving over winter rates, will continue into the fall, some to November first, some well into December.
- Panagra, the Pan-American-Grace Airways, has reduced fares on its "open jaw" trips around South America up to ten per cent. "Open jaw," you ask? It's a matter of flying down to Santiago, Chile, flying home from Buenos Aires, and covering the space between, the famous Chile-Argentine Lakes District, on the ground and on your own.
- More trans-Atlantic airlines are now offering you Europe on that very desirable many-cities-for-the-price-of-one plan. You buy a round trip ticket to, say, Rome, and by going one way, returning another and taking stopover privileges en route, you can see your pick of as many as 18 other cities besides without paying extra fare. Look into Trans World Airlines' Extra Stopover Plan; Scandinavian Airlines Extra City Trips; British Overseas Airways Magic Circle Routes. Ask your travel agent.

4. Since your rooms are structurally dull, you need richness in your furnishings. That means richness of pattern, exciting color schemes, texture in fabrics, carpets. Richness need not be high-priced, for good colors, well-drawn patterns and textures abound in moderate-priced home furnishings.

More of a hazard than money is the hazard of going too far and combining pattern that fights other patterns, or combining colors that are not happy together. Jean Cocteau has said, "Art consists of knowing how far to go too far." Unless you are very sure, stop just this side of "too far." But don't be too timid! That's even worse.

5. Avoid the stereotyped formula in everything. If all the people around you are doing something, that "something" is certain to be a stereotype. You may have to think longer about how to do it differently, but your money will be spent more effectively in the end. The common clichés in furniture arrangement, in draping windows, in ornaments for the mantel, etc., are the real money wasters, for they don't give you what you want, which is—in the last analysis—character and personality.

6. Be sure your accessories and furniture are the right size for the place in the room they are to occupy. Train your eye to recognize good scale—good relation in size of one object to another. Most people err in the direction of the undersealed (which means undersized) because small things cost less than big things. This is really a false economy, for it takes more, numerically, of the little bitty things to furnish a room. So they keep buying little lamps, little ash trays, little tables, little whatevers, because the room seems to swallow up those that are there. It is higher cost in the long run than buying a bigger, more effective thing that would do the job optically as well as functionally. And the larger the furnishings, the fewer you need to buy.

7. Try to have at least one thing of really fine intrinsic quality in every room. It can be anything: a fine rug, a fine painting, a fine piece of antique furniture. An object of really superb quality can lift a room, whose other contents are quite undistinguished, far above itself. The more limited your budget, the more this rule applies. This is a hard one to follow if your budget is really limited, and it may mean scouring second-hand stores, auctions, sales. But once you've found that wonderful thing, you'll want to feature it—big.

PANTRY SHELF NEWS

By JULIE POLSHEK

With Simplot Instant Idaho Potatoes, a new dehydrated-food development, you can make a batch of mashed potatoes in a couple of minutes; what's more, the end result has the flavor and tastiness of conventional mashed potatoes. The dehydrated product provides precooked granules, much like cornmeal in consistency, which you simply stir into a mixture of hot water and cold milk. That done, you toss in a chunk of butter and mix the combined ingredients with a fork until they're fluffy.

Potato soup or Vichysoisse can also be prepared in a twinkling with the potato granules, and they've great merit as a thickening agent for gravy or white sauce. The product's great desirability for boat or camping use is self-evident.

In the 7½-ounce can you get the granular equivalent of three pounds of peeled potatoes, some ten servings. If you haven't use for the entire content at one time, the unused portion can be stored in the can for future use.

Retail availability of Simplot Instant Potatoes is still limited, but the product can be had by mail from Vendome, Inc., 415 Madison Ave., New York City; their prepaid price per half-dozen cans is $2.75.

Another innovation in dehydrated foods worth looking into is the Glen Hall Vegetable Mix. Eight varieties of finely cut vegetables, processed at peak freshness, are included in the savory blend. The most remarkable feature of the mix is that it has the savor and the aroma of garden-fresh vegetables, which is quite a processing feat. Contained in the mix are carrots, tomatoes, onions, lettuce, spinach, celery, parsley and celery leaves. It's a blend that makes superb vegetable soup and affords a rich-flavored addition to meat loaves, gravies, white sauce, omelets.

If you can't find Glen Hall Vegetable Mix in your local shops, you can be served by mail from Charles & Co., 340 Madison Ave., New York, N. Y. The price for two 4-ounce jars (each equivalent to approximately 2½ pounds of trimmed vegetables) is $2.50. Not amiss to add, while on the subject of dehydrated foods, that this shop can also supply the dehydrated sliced onions and garlic slices produced by Glen Hall Brand. The former are priced at $2 per 4-ounce jar; the latter at $1.35 for two 1½-ounce jars.

The exotic conserve Southall's make from green plums spiked with rum is a delicacy you won't want to pass up, especially if you like the unusual. The conserve's blend contains only green plums, sugar and rum, handled with cooking skill that keeps the plum's savor and tang intact. There's rum enough in it to give a prominent flavor accent and the rum and fruit complement each other in delectable fashion. Vanilla ice-cream topped with Plum-Rum is an exotic dessert treat: tart shells filled with the conserve and topped off with whipped sour or sweet cream is another delicious dessert possibility. Plum-Rum's tangy savor complements duck or ham to perfection and, on a more mundane plane, gives a new fillip to breakfast toast or French toast.

Should you find your local shops don't have the conserve, Jordan Marsh of Boston will handle your order by mail. The prepaid price of a 3-jar box is $2.

One of the tastiest salad dressings I've encountered is a new Lawry creation, Garden Green Dressing with Bleu Cheese. The interesting blend contains parsley, lemon juice and egg yolks in addition to conventional dressing ingredients, giving the end product a quality that's tangy yet mellow. There's pronounced evidence of the bleu-cheese content and its zest enhances the mingled flavors of the other ingredients in a delightful manner.

Lawry's provide on the bottle's label two delectable recipes for which they use the dressing in their own restaurant-kitchen.

Retail distribution of Garden Green Dressing is confined to the West Coast, but you can obtain it by mail order from Jurgensen's, 842 E. California St., Pasadena 5, California. Three bottles cost $1.35 plus 85¢ postage for shipments west of the Mississippi; $1.15 postage east of that boundary. A case of 12 bottles can be had for $7.10 or $8 prepaid, depending on whether shipment point is east or west of the Mississippi.

A Seattle salmon packer has brought out a delicious main dish "quickie" combining salmon, macaroni and peas. The salmon used is of elite quality and as delicate in flavor as chicken; noteworthy also is the fact that the salmon-meat is in firm chunks and the peas are plump and intact. Not amiss to mention that both salmon and peas are present in lavish quantity.

Honey-Boy Dinner can be used as a cold main dish, topped with mayonnaise supplemented with minced onions and curry powder for a zippy touch. But it's at its best served hot; heating enhances the ingredient blend to my way of thinking, although this may be a purely personal preference. You'll find several suggestions on the can for both cold and hot serving.

Chances are the product hasn't reached all localities as yet, but meanwhile it can be obtained directly from Dehn & Co., 559 Colman Building, Seattle 4, Washington. A case of 12 cans costs $4.20, exclusive of shipping cost.

Pop-Drop, a pellet that converts ordinary drinking water into carbonated soda-pop, has two attractions. One, a fact that will interest calorie-counters, is that it contains no sugar, no calories, being sweetened with Abbott's Sucaryl. The second source of interest is to picknickers and motorists which stems from the fact that the pellets can be carried in your purse or pocket and used when you will. Each pellet has an individual compartment in the airtight aluminum-foil packet and you can tear off the pellet compartments one by one for use. Each pellet makes a glassful of soda-pop. The available flavors comprise root beer, lime-lemon and orange. The price of 18 pellets (6 of each of the flavors), is $1 prepaid. From Pop-Drop Beverage Co., Pioneer Bldg., St. Paul, Minn.

I was most agreeably surprised by the authentic citrus-fruit flavor achieved in Cramore Crystals. Without that aspect, my interest in the real convenience of these ready-to-use, powdered concentrates over juice-squeezing would have been canceled out. But as matters turned out, it zoomed.

The varieties available include lemon, lime, a lemon-lime blend, orange. The base is in each instance formulated from the juice of the fruit in question; other fruit components are also incorporated to enhance flavor and body and all this is compounded with synthetic ingredients that stabilize the compound for maximum shelf life. Unfortunately, such purposeful uses as this of synthetic ingredients in flavoring agents are in many people's mind stigmatized by misconceptions or inadequate knowledge of the services such ingredients render. I don't think much amplification is necessary on such everyday uses for Cramore Crystals as making beverages, for cookery, baking, molded salads, icings and frozen desserts. Although these Cramore products still haven't come into their own in the consumer market, they are widely used by clubs and restaurants and transportation services. It's pertinent also to add that they've been accorded the A.C.F. Seal of Culinary Merit by the highly regarded publication for chefs, Culinary Review.

The Cramore Crystals can be obtained from Cramore Fruit Products, Point Pleasant, N. J., in 2-ounce or 10-ounce bottles. Lemon costs 40¢ and $1.50, respectively; lime, 40¢ and $1.60; orange, 30¢ and $1.35. Lemon-lime, available only in 10-ounce size, is priced at $1.50. (Minimum order $1; it's requested that you don't ask for C.O.D. shipment.) The availability of packaging in cans may interest those who make overseas shipments.

The flair for soup making for which the French are famous is tastily manifested by the superb Liebig soups being imported from France. They've an outstanding lobster bisque. In their exceptional cream-of-tomato blend you find the all-too-rare quality of spicing restraint that permits the tomato's savor to assert itself properly. Liebig cream-of-mushroom and cream-of-asparagus soups are far above average and the continental flavor is a further source of great sipping pleasure. Both cream varieties lend themselves to serving cold.

There's a vegetable soup with a smoked-pork base and another made without a meat base; in both delicious products, the vegetable content is puréed, giving a mingled bouquet of their savors.

Oxtail soup and an exceptional chicken-with-rice complete the varieties from which you can choose. In all of them, you get a wonderfully rich-bodied quality and seasoning handled to perfection. The price per can, containing three to four servings, is 75¢ for cream-of-tomato and vegetable without meat base; for the other varieties, 89¢. All are available by mail from B. Altman & Co., Fifth Ave., New York. (Minimum order $3; above prices do not include shipping.)

For party canapés and hors d'oeuvres you'll find high merit in Katerettes, rich pastry shells which you fill with whatever you wish. For hot hors d'oeuvres, shell and filling can be popped into the oven and served piping hot. As a matter of fact, heating the shells for any use enhances the flavor of the rich pastry dough. The shells are paper-thin and attractively fashioned into diminutive forms. One, only an inch and a half across, looks like a fluted pie shell; the other is a cone measuring a mere two inches end-to-end. A package of Louise Dart Katerettes provides 12 shells of each type. You can order Katerettes by mail from Charles & Co., 340 Madison Ave., New York. The postpaid price of 2 packages is $2.25.

their ability to recognize and evaluate the most subtle differences in flavors. Before each session each member of the panel was required to take a Check Test to prove that his sensitivity was not temporarily in abeyance. Only when a judge passed that test was the preference recorded.

We know, of course, that the opinion of so small and so select a group might not be the same as the preferences of large groups picked at random. We know also that these were people endowed by nature with sensitive palates, whose skills improved over months of training. The tests were scientifically conducted and carefully evaluated. The results: 72% (almost 3 to 1) in favor of meats cooked without thawing.

Session after session the judges tasted paired samples of meats cut from identical parts of the same animal, one from the left, one from the right side. (Modern investigators disagree with Maryland gourmets of the old school who insisted always upon hams 'left-hand of the hog" because they were presumed to be more tender, less exercised.)

These pairs were frozen at the same temperatures, cooked side by side in the same ovens or broilers. There were rib roasts, rolled roasts, steaks, pork chops and roasts, lamb stew, liver, short ribs of beef —all kinds of meats—roasted, broiled, braised, sautéed, stewed. The most elaborate precautions were taken to make sure that the meats were as close as possible in appearance, in size, in every other way. One mate of the paired sample was thawed before cooking. The remaining mate was left frozen. Each judge was given three pieces of meat, one that had been thawed before cooking, one that had been cooked from the solid-frozen state and one picked at random. The judges were asked, "Which of these meats are mates? Which is the odd fellow? Which do you prefer?"

Their findings, we are glad to say, agree with our own, arrived at after a good deal of very pleasant trial and eating. Solid-frozen meat tastes better.

No enormous difference—not so much that anyone need ever feel apologetic about thawing meat, if that's what you want to do! But the difference seems to be discernible to the discriminating palate. And when you consider that no-thawing means greater convenience, less shrinkage and probably higher nutritive values, we think it's a matter of some importance not only to the gourmet but also to Mr. and Mrs. Average and all the Little Averages who want their food to be good.

More Vitamins?

As to the nutritive values of meats cooked thawed or solid-frozen, Commander Kotschevar made a series of studies which indicate that meats cooked after thawing contain less niacin, thiamin and riboflavin—all components of the precious vitamin B complex. He found most of these lost vitamins just where you would expect to find them—in the drip. And just as you'd expect, the losses were greatest in meats which dripped most—in steaks, for instance, thawed at room temperature, and in sliced liver. Losses were less noticeable with a lamb roast or pork chops. Always the drip was greater and losses greater when meats were defrosted at room temperatures than when they were thawed in the refrigerator.

Some steaks drip a lot; some not so much. The amount of drip depends to some extent upon the freezing methods. From meats that have been rather slowly frozen at zero or five below, comparatively high temperatures such as you will find in home freezers, there is considerably more drip than from commercially frozen meats like those pre-packed by the L. B. Darling Company, where freezing is practically instantaneous at temperatures 40 below zero.

It's easy to see why there should be a difference; it's all in the cell structure.

With instant freezing you have the formation of a great many very tiny ice crystals. If freezing is slower, crystals are fewer and much larger. When the large crystals thaw, they tear the fibers and cause the juice to flow.

It's because of this mechanical action, comparable in a way to pounding, that some people have said that frozen meats seem sometimes more tender than fresh. Through slow freezing and slow thawing fibers have been broken but the loss of juices and tastiness incurred in the process far outweighs gain, if any, in tenderness.

Thawing Means Shrinkage

If you are interested in getting as much meat as possible to your table, prevent shrinkage by cooking it frozen. Differences in shrinkage between thawed and solid-frozen meats are startling.

In the laboratory a steak that weighed 2 pounds and 4 ounces when it was taken from the freezer, weighed only 1 pound and 8 ounces after it was thawed, and only 1 pound and 3 ounces after it was cooked. Another steak with a freezer weight of only 1 pound 3 ounces was broiled solid-frozen. It shrank only 1 ounce, weighed 1 pound 2 ounces when it was ready to cut. In one case a loss of 17 ounces as against 1 ounce.

Sliced liver was also dramatic. If allowed to thaw completely at room temperature, sliced liver weighed after cooking just about half as much as a similar slice cooked solid-frozen.

Cooking Time

"But the cooking time is longer when you don't thaw. So you use more fuel," some people argue. It's true that cooking times are generally longer. Although in some cases, strangely enough, they turned out to be just about the same. Still fuel is so inexpensive compared to the cost of meat! In the New York area, for example, you can use your oven or broiler, gas or electric, for a full hour at a cost of just about two cents. Probably you could pay for the extra cooking time for a whole year for the price of a single steak.

How much longer must you cook solid-frozen meats? It's difficult to give a categorical answer. It varies from meat to meat, from cut to cut nd according to the temperatures ou use. According to Commander Kotschevar, "The average increase n time of cooking for 41 groups f roasts was about 36% higher for rozen as against thawed, although he variations for individual groups were from 4½% to 80%." Some tews, for instance, took only 3 minutes longer. In some cases the ime was the same and in a few ases it was 5% less.

Food Technologist Dr. S. Gilbert Davis of Worcester, Mass., has done a great deal of experimentation particularly with L. B. Darling's Control Frozen Roast, Steaks and Chops. He says, "Roasts of beef, lamb and pork will be extra tender, juicy and finer flavored when cooked immediately after removal from the freezer without defrosting. Hard-frozen meat should be cooked from half again to almost twice as long as you cook fresh meats."

As a general rule keep in the back of your mind "twice as long." Then, to give yourself a little more leeway, plan to have your roast ready about half an hour before the meal. Many chefs insist on this waiting period of 15 to 30 minutes in the warming oven or any warm spot. They say it allows the meat to "gather itself together," mellows the flavor, makes slicing easier.

You Need a Thermometer

It's all very well to have some rough idea of the amount of time required for cooking. But how can you be sure that your meat will be as you like it? That's a problem. In a frozen food survey conducted among 500 members of a Homemakers' Reference Committee, the Kroger Food Foundation of Cincinnati discovered confusion unlimited. About 26% used a meat thermometer. But ways of judging "doneness" ranged from "going according to rule" (what rule?), "sticking with a fork," "judging by appearance," "trial and error," "by guess and by golly," "brownness," "experience," "cutting off a piece," "when no blood shows," "odor," and "when it has cooked a long time."

Actually, there is only one way to judge—use a thermometer. But you can't insert a thermometer into solid-frozen meat! What do you do in this case? When you're roasting, wait until the meat is thawed. The end of your regular cooking period might be a good time. Insert thermometer in the thickest part of the meat not touching a bone. Then continue cooking until the temperature reaches the required degree.

130°F.	Beef very rare
140°F.	Beef rare
160°F.	Beef well-done
165°F.	Lamb (continental style)
170°F.	Veal
180°F.	Lamb well-done
190°F.	Pork
200°F.	Poultry

But what about broiling? We all know that there is no quicker way to ruin a thermometer than to expose it to direct heat. So you simply use your meat thermometer as you would use a clinical thermometer. Wait until the end of the usual cooking period. Insert the thermometer into a small incision. Be sure it gets into the center and then "take the temperature" allowing the thermometer to stay in place for just about a minute or two. Remove the thermometer and continue cooking.

No special recipes are needed, for as a general rule you cook hard-frozen meats by the same methods at the same temperatures using the same fresh-meat recipes.

How to Roast Frozen Meats

Although searing is a controversial matter, we find that it gives a deliciously juicy product, and fine flavor. (Commander Kotschevar agrees.) Suit yourself, but if you decide to sear, preheat oven to 480°F. Allow total of about 20 minutes for searing a 6 to 8 pound roast. Actually searing times can not be given exactly—should be just sufficient to brown lightly. After the searing, the oven temperature is reduced quickly by opening the oven door, then roasting continues as for unfrozen meat. Count on approximately 12 to 25 minutes of additional oven time per pound.

Use a constant oven temperature of about 300°F. The interior temperature of the meat registered on the thermometer will be 130°F. for very rare, 140°F. for rare, 160°F. for well done.

Lamb should be roasted at 275° to 300°F. and the finished temperature if you like it continental style showing a trace of pink, should be about 165°F. For well done, the thermometer should read about 175° to 180°F.

Veal is roasted at 300°F. and brought up to a temperature of 170°F.

For pork slightly higher temperatures are generally used. The oven should be about 350°F. and the meat should be cooked well done always—to a temperature of 190°F.

With frozen roasts we have found by experience that the thermometer can usually be inserted after about 40 minutes of cooking. But if the roast is very large, wait until you have cooked it as much as you would fresh meat.

To broil frozen meats

Once again you may use your regular method, merely increasing the cooking time. Or you may quickly sear steaks or chops at a high temperature 480° to 500°F., browning lightly on both sides. Then reduce the temperature to 300° or 350°F. For charcoal broiling, sear by holding the meat close to the glowing coals and then set it on a rack at the usual distance. Cook the length of time you would cook fresh meat. Then insert your thermometer making a small cut if need be. Make sure the thermometer is in the center of the meat. Leave it in place for 1 or 2 minutes. Take your reading. Always remove thermometer before returning meat to the broiler.

For very rare steaks, the thermometer reading should be 130°F., although many thermometers are marked at 140°F. for rare. For steak medium to well-done 150° to 160°F.

Lamb chops should not be overcooked. They generally are. The thermometer should read 165°F.

Grilling or Pan Broiling

Hard-frozen steaks or chops may be grilled on a griddle or in a heavy frying pan by exactly the same method you use for fresh meat. Merely increase the time and take the temperature.

Some investigators have noticed that steaks, chops and thick patties which are hard-frozen at the start of cooking sometimes cook unevenly when pan-broiled. Unexplained irregularities occur. That is why Commander Kotschevar has developed a slightly different technique. He heats the pan or griddle to about medium heat (not hot, about 350°F.), then cooks the meat 3 to 6 minutes covered on each side. (Too brief a period to steam or stew the meat.) Then he removes the cover and cooks meat in the usual way. By this quick-thaw method a solid-frozen sirloin steak 2 inches thick cooked in about 36 minutes.

As a general rule, however, meats should be cooked in an uncovered pan without foil. Covering produces steam and acts like a Turkish bath; opens the pores so that the juices stream forth. Wonderful for the gravy! Not too good for the meat itself!

Hamburgers. Several excellent brands of quick-frozen hamburgers and cheeseburgers are available conveniently packaged. Most of them are exceedingly thin patties and are best cooked on a hot griddle for a few seconds. The problem here is to avoid over-cooking and to serve immediately.

About good thick home-size patties—these you must form before freezing. Make 3 or 4 patties out of a pound of the best chopped beef using 20% fat. Place 2 or 3 layers of waxed paper or freezer paper between each patty so they won't stick together.

Cook on a heated griddle or heavy frying pan with very little fat, or under a broiler searing both sides quickly at high heat and then cook in your own favorite way until the meat thermometer inserted in the center registers rare, medium rare or well done. It is best to turn only once during the broiling. Season each side before turning.

Braising Meats and Pot Roasts

Procedures are the same as for fresh meat. You may brown the pot roast in a heavy pan on top of the stove, or you may find it easier and quicker to do the job in a hot oven. Follow your regular recipe. At the end of the usual cooking time, insert meat thermometer and take temperature. Pot roasts are generally cooked well-done 180° to 185°F. The thermometer should not be left inside the meat when it is being cooked over direct heat or in a covered pan.

Stews-Ragouts, etc. Formerly we believed that stew meats were difficult to cook frozen "because the pieces stick together and can't be browned." However, you can get around this difficulty very easily. Simply brush the meat fore and aft with fat or oil. Place in a very hot oven or under a broiler. In the heat the pieces will drop apart. You may separate them with a fork and spread them out for even browning, turning once or twice. This method saves any spattering. It is easy and quick. Less smoke in the kitchen.

nd you proceed from this point n just as if you were cooking esh meat. You will probably find iat the cooking time will be only little longer. In several cases ommander Kotschevar discovered took only about 3 minutes longer. or stews you'll judge doneness by nderness rather than interior mperature.

Using the Pressure Cooker

Your pressure cooker is a great oon when you are making stews, oulash or braised dishes from ozen meats. It's fast and sure. rown meat in the oven or on top f the stove. Place in the pressure ooker along with seasonings and ther ingredients called for in your cipe. Then adjust the cover and eat until the steam begins to rise -a thin, steady line. At this point ou may be sure that your meat is mpletely thawed through. There's guess-work here.

Proceed to finish the job accordg to the manufacturer's direcons. Cooking time varies from ish to dish, from one pressure ooker to another. As a general ile, however, we feel that most cipes we've tried require too uch cooking and result in stringy eat. You might try bringing the ressure down immediately by setng the cooker in cold water instead of allowing the pressure to go down naturally.

Sautéeing or Pan Frying

This method is very similar to pan broiling or grilling except that you use more fat. Thin slices of meat are usually cooked in this manner and you must take care that the cooking is not done so fast that the outside is brown and crisp before the inside has a chance to heat. In this connection there is one recipe that we simply must share with you. It's so good and so fast—made with a package of Excelsior Sliced Calf's Liver—Fegato Veneziana (liver as it is cooked by the charming Venetians). This dish has overtones of Chinese and souvenirs of the great Bolognese cuisine.

Cut the frozen liver into strips about a quarter of an inch thick. This is easy to do with a serrated knife. Slice 2 medium-sized onions and cook in 2 tablespoons olive oil, 1 tablespoon butter until soft and golden but not at all brown. Add the liver and heat just until the red color completely disappears. Add 1 half cup red wine, salt and pepper to taste. Bring to a boil. Sprinkle generously with finely chopped parsley and serve immediately with rice, fine noodles or with Italian-style corn meal mush —polenta. Makes 3 servings.

OLD-FASHIONED BREAD

Refrigerated Dough Method

The objective here is to slow own or stop the fermentation for time. Any dough can be refrigrated, provided it has enough food the form of yeast and sugar and little salt. When preparing mixres for refrigeration, one must herefore remember to double the mount of yeast and sugar, and ugment slightly even the salt. The ough (often after kneading) is laced in a buttered bowl, well overed, and is then ready to be ored in the refrigerator for as ng as 4 to 5 days. The average pen shelf, normally between 45° nd 50° F., is ideal climate for the tarded dough.

It is an incalculable convenience be able to remove as much dough s you wish and when you need it! fere then is an important time aver for yeast-bread bakers. Once ut of the box, the refrigerated ough is shaped into loaves or rolls nd is allowed to rise in room temerature. Unless the dough has een starved or otherwise debilitated, it will cheerfully come back to life in less than an hour.

New Bread Creations. When the objective is limited to baking "some bread" as quickly as possible, one can do nothing but follow religiously a speedy formula. However, the epicure will seldom take this course. To him baking yeast breads will be another challenge to lift it out of the stereotype. He won't rest till he can bake the ideal bread: the bread that will offer energy, flavor and aroma, unlike any other food, refreshingly new, day after day.

The one thing he cannot afford to ignore is the function of gluten. Only wheat, and to a small degree rye, contain appreciable amounts of gluten, that remarkable substance which allows the dough to expand. Only those two flours mentioned can be used alone in yeast breads. With this in mind, when you decide to change the basic ingredients in a formula, be sure that wheat is given a high position among the flours.

The mixing should be accomplished in a proper sequence: First the wheat is given a chance to develop the gluten, then the rest of the flours are added. Casserole Bacon Bread

(Batter method)

First step: Milk Mixture. Stir into 1 cup hot milk 2½ teaspoons salt, 2 tablespoons brown sugar, 1½ tablespoons bacon drippings. Cool to lukewarm.

Second step: Yeast Mixture. Measure into warm mixing bowl 1 cup lukewarm water, dissolve 1 tablespoon brown sugar. Crumble or sprinkle in 2 cakes or packages of yeast, stir gently. When bubbly, in about 5 minutes, combine with milk mixture, then add 1 egg, well beaten.

Third step: Flour Mixture. Add to above mixture 3½ cups sifted all-purpose flour, 1 cup sifted whole wheat flour, ¼ teaspoon ground coriander. Beat vigorously 3 minutes. Cover. Allow to rise in warm place (80°-85° F.) until twice its bulk; approximately 45 minutes. Now stir in 2 tablespoons minced crisp bacon and sprinkle lightly with white pepper. Beat 2 minutes.

Fourth step: Baking. Preheat oven to 400° F. Pour batter into 2 small oiled casseroles or baking dishes about 1½ pints each. Baking time about 40 minutes.

Whole Wheat Brunch Bread

(Straight-dough method)

First step: Milk Mixture. Stir into 1 cup hot milk 1½ teaspoons salt, 3 tablespoons light molasses, 3 tablespoons honey, 5 tablespoons butter (or other shortening). Cool to lukewarm, then add 2 tablespoons orange juice.

Second step: Yeast Mixture. Measure into warm mixing bowl 1¼ cups lukewarm water, ½ teaspoon brown sugar. Crumble or sprinkle in 2 cakes or packages yeast. Stir. When full of bubbles (4-5 minutes) combine with milk mixture, then add 1 beaten egg yolk. Mix.

Third step: Flour Mixture. Sift into the batter 1½ cups all-purpose flour, 2 cups whole wheat flour. Beat one minute, then add 1 cup sifted all-purpose flour and about 2 cups whole wheat flour. Beat 2 minutes. Add 2 tablespoons soya flour, ⅓ teaspoon ground cumin* (see note 1). Beat one more minute, then—

Fourth step: Kneading. Knead until the bread dough is smooth and no longer sticks to the board. Use just enough flour to make an easily workable dough. Place in lightly buttered warm bowl, brush exposed part with butter, cover and let rise in a warm (about 80° F.) place until it doubles in bulk, about one hour. Stir for a couple of seconds, and knead lightly only one minute. Let rise again in the bowl for a half hour. Divide into four portions, shape into loaves. Let rise, covered, while stove is being preheated (15 minutes).

Fifth step: Baking. Place the four loaves on a lightly buttered baking sheet, as far apart from each other as possible (see note 2). Cut a line or two on the surface with a sharp knife (about ¼" deep), brush with egg-white wash for extra glaze (beaten egg-white mixed with 4 tablespoons water) and bake at 400° F. for 15 minutes, then reduce to 375° F. Total baking time is about 35-45 minutes. Upon removal, cool gently on wire rack.

*Note 1. For fear that you might find it difficult to obtain, I left out my favorite Brunch Bread condiment: 1 tablespoon grated carob, or carob powder. Carob, known also as St. John's Bread, is a chocolate colored pod, the fruit of a lovely Mediterranean tree. It is wholesome, nonfattening and its bittersweet flavor blends perfectly with grains, especially whole wheat. I suggest you grate the small amount needed from the fresh pods, sold for a few pennies in Greek, Syrian or Turkish groceries.

Note 2. For a hearth oven type of bread with a perfect crust, try the "Dutch Plate" pictured on page 160. This clay platter, designed by the author, is placed on the middle rac when you preheat the oven. Two pee (wooden shovels used for brick ovens come with the plate. Cornmeal sprinkled on the peel for the finishe dough. When ready for baking, th loaf resting on the peel is taken the oven. With a jerking motion will slip off the peel onto the h Dutch Plate. The hot plate acts lik the sole of the brick oven and th dough will rise instantly. The peel also used to shift the position of th bread or to remove loaves when com pletely baked.

Variations in Pumpernickel

Pumpernickel is a misunderstood bread. People generally think that it is made from very fancy flours and other mostly top secret ingredients. Not so!

In its purest form. pumpernickel has only these five ingredients: water, rye-meal, yeast, salt and shortening. The latter is optional. The coarse meal or dark rye flour will produce a natural dark shade in the crumb. Most commercially baked breads of this type are made of lighter flours and then colored for effect with chicory, dark molasses, caramel or Kitchen Bouquet.

You are probably familiar with two types of pumpernickel: the sweet and the sour. The first has no unusual flavoring agent, the latter, however, must be made with sour dough.

Pumpernickel—Sweet

(Straight-dough method)

Dissolve 2 teaspoons brown sugar in ½ cup warm water. Sprinkle in 2 packages of dry yeast. Stir gently and when ready (4 to 5 minutes) combine with following mixture:

Cream 1½ tablespoons butter and add 2 tablespoons dark molasses, 1 tablespoon brown sugar, 1 cup lukewarm water, ½ cup sour milk, 1 tablespoon salt, 1 tablespoon crushed caraway seeds. Mix thoroughly with yeast mixture. Gradually sift in 2 cups all-purpose flour, 2 cups whole wheat flour. Beat 3 minutes, then gradually sift in 2 cups medium rye flour. Beat one minute, then add 1 cup rye meal. Beat 2-3 minutes adding, if necessary, some water or meal flour to obtain a workable dough. Turn onto floured board and knead until you produce a fairly stiff and smooth dough no longer sticky. Put in buttered bowl, cover and let rise in a warm spot. When the dough has reached twice its bulk, punch down. Knead briefly for only a minute, then let rise again. Divide into 6 or 8 pocket-size loaves, shaping them as desired, round or oblong. Preheat oven to 400°F. Meanwhile dough can rest. Puncture with fork. Place steaming hot water in the oven. Bake 15 minutes, then reduce heat to 375°F. and bake till done, possibly another half an hour or more. Brush with butter when done, and cool carefully on wire rack. When completely cool, wrap in foil or in polyethylene bags for the freezer. Fresh-frozen pumpernickel is delicious!

Sour-Dough Pumpernickel

First, the formula for a sour dough. Keep that among selected recipes which you are collecting for the cook book you are going to write some day.

Prepare in bowl: Dissolve 1 yeast cake or package in 1 cup of lukewarm water. Mix in enough medium dark rye flour to make a soft paste. Wrap a small, peeled onion in cheesecloth and let i sink into the paste. Cover. Twic a day add to this ferment ½ cu of water and about ¾ cup of ry flour. Keep the mixture soft an at room temperature. When ur gently needed, the starter may b used on the second day; howeve it will have a more mature tast and more kick on the third day Use it up in mixing your brea dough, but be sure to save som mixed dough for the next batch Keep such reserve well wrapped i the refrigerator.

And now the dough. Measur into warm mixing bowl ⅓ cu lukewarm water and dissolve in i 1 package yeast. In 4 to 5 minutes when bubbly, add 1 cup lukewarm water, 1 tablespoon brown sugar, tablespoons dark molasses, 1 table spoon butter, ½ cup grated stal pumpernickel bread (or ½ cu mashed potatoes, optional), 1 ta blespoon caraway seeds, 1 table spoon salt, 1 cup sour dough. Mi thoroughly. Then sift and blend cups all-purpose flour, 2 table spoons powdered milk (nonfa milk solids).

The mixture should be soft. Bea it vigorously for 3 minutes. Afte a few minutes rest, gradually ad 1 cup sifted medium rye flour an about ½ cup rye meal.

The dough must be still so enough to beat it for 2 to 3 min utes, then turn onto floured boar and knead energetically until th dough is no longer sticky bu smooth, elastic and fairly stif Place in the usual manner in bow and let rise in a warm spot unt double. This shouldn't take mor than 90 minutes. Rye flours ca not stand overfermentation, an when forced to stretch too fa might result in flat bread. Punc down. Play with the dough on th board for one minute, then retur to bowl for a second rising lastin about 20 minutes. Punch down. D vide into 4 dwarf loaves. Special Flours for and from Special People

"Nothing is taken out of the grain and nothing is added" is the unofficial motto of the industry processing grain au naturel. The home-baker is now in a position to choose from an impressive list her favorite stone-ground grains from rye meal to cottonseed flour. In some localities, especially on the West Coast, these wholesome ingredients are no longer confined to health stores. Many individual grocers and a few chain stores carry at least the most popular stone-ground flours.

The majority of processors are small millers, some in business for generations, others having resumed activity quite recently. On the other hand, Elam of Chicago, El Molino of California and Old Fashioned Millers of Minnesota, to mention a few of the best known names, have outlets in all directions. The point which all of them stress is that the old-type millstone grinds slowly. In this cooler process, all natural values—minerals, vitamins and precious flavors—are retained and that the use of chemicals are avoided.

The fact that the flour has been ground between stones will not satisfy the orthodox among the consumers. He wants further assurance that the grain he is buying was "organically" grown. (In organic farming only natural fertilizers are permitted. Treating the soil or the living plant with chemicals is taboo.) There are a surprising number of individuals, scattered all over the country, packaging products of this kind exclusively. Some use the health stores as outlets, others will supply only the customers on their mailing lists. Finally, those who insist upon absolutely fresh grain end up buying a miniature stone burr mill and grind the flours right in their own kitchens as needed.

Would you like special flour for your new special bread—unbleached white flour, gluten flour, 100% whole wheat, rye or rye meal, potato flour, brown rice flour, stone-ground flour, "organically" grown flour?

Francis Kalnay has compiled a list of retail and mail-order outlets which you may have, if you'll send your request along with a stamped, self-addressed envelope to HOUSE BEAUTIFUL, Food Department, 572 Madison Avenue, New York 22, N.Y.

OIL FINISHES FOR WOODWORK

By LEAVITT DUDLEY

OIL FINISH FOR WOODWORK

An oil finish is one of the oldest and most satisfactory types of wood finishes, and in the opinion of many, one of the most beautiful. Its rich color and lustrous patina improve with age and additional applications of oil; it is impervious to water, heat, scratches and most stains.

Linseed oil is one of our best-known wood preservatives. Unlike most of the more recently developed paints, varnishes, lacquers and other surface finishes, oil penetrates the wood deeply. Furniture so treated is unlikely to dry and crack in the dry heat of modern homes or, on the other hand, to mildew in damp climates. The natural affinity of oil and oxygen draws that element into the wood itself, literally nourishing and giving additional life to the material.

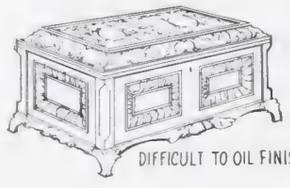
Oil finishes are permanent finishes, never requiring removal. An additional maintenance coat once or twice a year preserves the handsome appearance of furniture. Local applications of more oil usually remove blemishes made by hot dishes, cocktail glasses or similar causes.

If a future change to a paint, varnish or other surface finish is desired, the oil finish will serve as a perfect base.



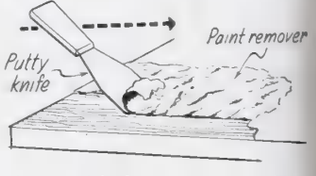
The out-of-pocket expense of this type of finish is low, but a home craftsman pays for its beauty and durability with time and labor. Bringing out its polish is not a job for the lazy or impatient. Lots of hard work is involved with no short cuts. A good oil finisher measures his time with a calendar, not a clock.

Only one who truly loves woods should attempt this finish. Watching their tones mellow and deepen with succeeding applications, appreciating the pointing up of the grain patterns and the sheen of the final satiny surfaces is his reward for his efforts. No quick, easy, modern methods can duplicate the results.

Furniture, paneling, shelving and other similar indoor woodwork is suitable for the oil treatment. However, because of the difficulty in developing a polish, its use on uneven, heavily carved surfaces should be avoided.

A GOOD PIECE FOR OIL FINISH-

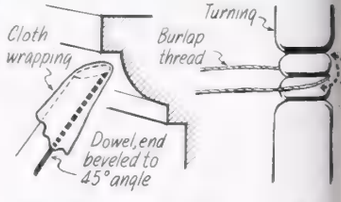
DIFFICULT TO OIL FINISH-



Oak, maple, birch, mahogany and pine are among the commonly used woods which take an oil finish very well. The natural colors deepen, and the whiteness of a soft pine is turned to a rich honey shade. Because of this tendency to darken wood tones, oil finishes on teak, walnut, cherry, rosewood or other naturally oily varieties are not recommended. The final colors are too dark to show off the wood properly. Redwood is also too deep-toned for oil application.

REMOVAL OF OLD FINISH

As in any other finishing method, proper preparation of the surface prior to the application of the oil is very important. It must be absolutely clean, with the raw wood exposed.



If woodwork is not new, any previous finish must be removed. A good quality, wax-free commercial remover is best for this purpose. A type with a syrupy consistency is easiest to handle for general use, and a thicker solution is available for vertical surfaces such as wall panels. Always read and carefully follow the directions on the container. Work in a well ventilated room, but out of drafts and direct sunlight. Flow the remover over the surface thickly with an old brush in one direction only. Do not re-brush it once applied, as this destroys the film which forms and prevents the material from drying too rapidly.

Let the remover stand about 15 to 20 minutes, or until the old finish has a wrinkled texture. Before it dries, lift off the old surface with a dull putty knife, then wipe off residue with burlap. A final wash with clean soft rags, dipped in turpentine or mineral spirits, will neutralize further action of the remover.

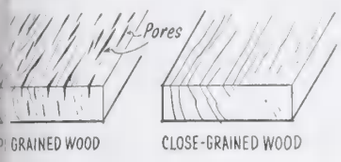
Old toothbrushes, small scrub brushes, orangewood sticks or small pointed dowels covered with cloth, threads of burlap and strands of steel wool help with the removal and cleaning of finish from the crevices of turnings and moldings.



Don't try to work more than a couple of square feet at a time with the remover, or it will dry before you have a chance to lift it. If it does dry, flow on a little more and wait for it to act. Repeat applications if the finish is not oved the first time.

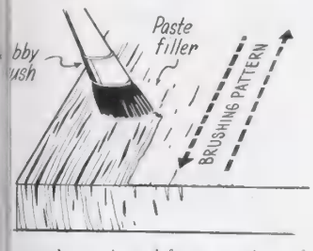
'aint brushes used with the re- er are no longer fit for other poses, but they may be pre- ed for the same use again by a ning in denatured alcohol and soapy water.

OOTHING WOOD SURFACE



he pores of open-grain woods, as oak or mahogany, are ed in first-class finishing jobs. ood paste wood filler, thinned turpentine to the consistency hick cream, is tinted to match color of the wood with an oil n. Stain may be purchased y mixed in a wide assortment olors, or you may mix your from tube oil color diluted turpentine.

hen satisfactorily tinted, the e is applied to the surface with bby brush in the direction of wood grain. After setting for to fifteen minutes, or until its glossy appearance is replaced duller opalescence, the paste bbed off across the grain with se toweling, burlap or heavy n pads.

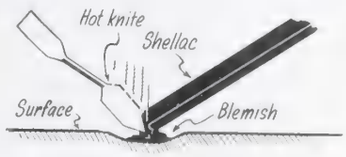
u have to work fast with the . filling only a small area at e, pressing the material deep- to the pores with the brush wiping before it dries too hard.



Finally, after a 24-hour hardening of the completed job, the surface is smoothed of excess paste by a light sanding with garnet finishing paper, 4/0 to 8/0 grade. A piece of one-inch celotex, about the size of a blackboard eraser, has the proper resilience for an excellent sanding block.

Gouges and dents are built up with a shellac stick, obtainable in more than 50 different colors to match almost any wood. With a spatula-like "burning-in" knife heated over a spirit lamp, the stick is melted into the depression in the same manner as solder.

The shellac-filled area is smoothed with the hot knife blade, and lightly sanded with finishing paper.

Nail holes and small cracks in inconspicuous places may be filled with wood dough, available in several different shades. Pack dough deeply into the well-cleaned hole with a moistened finger, carefully keeping it from the surrounding area. Allow to dry thoroughly, trim off the surplus with a sharp knife and sand with 7/0 or 8/0 finishing paper.

Particularly in the case of fine old pieces of furniture, professional finishers do not attempt to remove every slight imperfection. A few dents showing beneath a handsome oil polish are the signs of many years of honest and faithful service, in no ways detracting from the final appearance or value.

APPLYING THE FINISH

With its surface clean, repaired, and thoroughly dry, the wood is now ready for the first oiling.

Experts prefer a pure raw linseed oil of the top quality only. Boiled oil will dry faster, but does not penetrate so deeply and may darken the wood excessively, particularly if heated.

Don't stint on the quantity of oil. A quart may be enough for a chair or small chest, but a large dining table may require a gallon before time for the final polishing.

Ideal working conditions are provided by a clean, closed, but well-ventilated room, neither too dry nor too humid, and of about 70 degrees Fahrenheit. Conditions most comfortable to the human body are most favorable for oil finishing.

Pour some of the oil into a coffee can or other open container. With a 2″ or 3″ brush or a soft cloth, apply the oil freely and generously to the wood.

After the first coating, allow about 24 hours for the wood to absorb the oil, or longer if necessary. Test for dryness by holding your hand on the surface for several minutes. If the spot is then not oily, it is dry enough for the next coat.

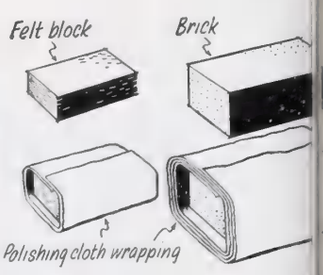
Wood grain may be raised slightly by the oil. If so, remove the burr with a light sanding from 4/0 to 8/0 grade garnet finishing paper.

With the next step, the love of the craftsman for his job is put to the test. With a piece of linen, a high-grade cheesecloth, a lint-free cotton cloth, rub the surface with the grain of the wood until it is no longer sticky and the desired sheen is reached. For easier handling, wrap the cloth about a small felt block for smaller surfaces or a common brick for large areas. The weight of the brick will allow you to put more pressure into the operation.



"Is it too late, Doctor?"

Fortunately, it's not too late for more and more Americans who are going to their doctors in time . . . at the first sign of any one of the seven danger signals which may mean cancer: (1) any sore that does not heal (2) a lump or thickening, in the breast or elsewhere (3) unusual bleeding or discharge (4) any change in a wart or mole (5) persistent indigestion or difficulty in swallowing (6) persistent hoarseness or cough (7) any change in normal bowel habits.

By showing Americans how to protect themselves against cancer, the American Cancer Society is saving thousands of lives today—hopes to save countless more tomorrow by support for research and medicine. To guard yourself and your family against cancer, call the nearest office of the American Cancer Society or write to "Cancer" in care of your local Post Office.

Garden tractors now work year round

Sawing firewood is easy. Power take-off that runs saw also hooks up to a 110-volt generator attachment to supply emergency electric power during storms or for using portable electric tools in the garden.

Mowing grass can be done three ways: sickle-bar cutter (shown) for weeds and hay, regular reel lawn mower, or rotary cutter. Latter also makes a leaf grinder for fall clean-up. Tractor also can push your leaf sweeper.

Bulldozing soil (or snow) is a fast operation for the bigger models, especially those equipped with a reverse gear for backing. But tractor-powered garden sprayers (usable as paint sprayers) also are great timesavers. Attachment is quick, simple operation.

PHOTOGRAPHED AT QUICK MFG. CO. TEST GROUNDS

Plowing is by discs (here), or rotating tines, or regular moldboard. All require a powerful tractor: look for 3 to 5 H.P. if plowing is to be the major job. 1½ H.P. is enough for cultivating and occasional light plowing. Small (12- to 15-inch width) rotary tillers also do a good plowing job with 1- to 2-H.P. engines.

OIL FINISHES FOR WOODWORK

furniture when applying the oil, to insure all-around penetration, better wood preservation, and prevention of warping. Out-of-sight under surfaces need not be rubbed.

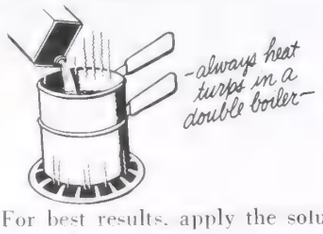
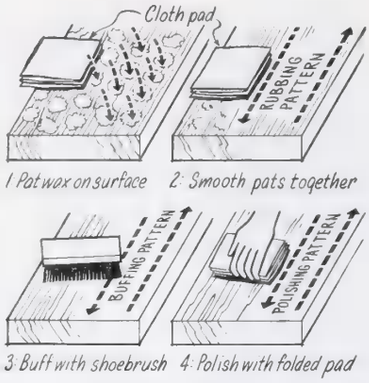
The finish can be kept in good shape by the addition of one or two light coats of oil, with rub-downs, each year.

Rags used in linseed oil are highly susceptible to spontaneous combustion. Do not store them in corners of the shop, but burn them, wash them out, or keep those used in application of oil in closed containers immersed in the remainder of the liquid.



Polishing cloths may be washed with mineral spirits and re-used.

WAXING



The durability of table tops, or other surfaces exposed to stains and hard treatment, is improved by a coat of wax.

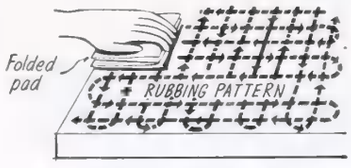
Use either a good commercial brand with a beeswax base, or make up your own of yellow beeswax and gum turpentine.

To prepare this, add enough turps to dissolve the beeswax to a mushy consistency when allowed to stand overnight. Pour off excess liquid. Heating the wax and turpentine in a double boiler speeds the dissolving, but use caution with the inflammable mixture.

For best results, apply the solution evenly with a cloth pad, buff with a good horsehair shoe-brush, and give a final polish with a lint-free cloth. Two coats are recommended, but do not apply so much that the wax "piles up."

OIL VARNISH FINISH

The high quality of a real oil finish has no substitute, but its satiny surface may be approximated with a fraction of its required time and labor by means of an oil varnish finish.



Wood requires the same preparation as that of the oil finish, but, instead of remaining raw for the final finish, the surface is sealed with a good plywood sealer. This dries thoroughly and is lightly sanded with worn abrasive paper.

Mix the finish coat of one part raw linseed oil, two parts pure gum turpentine, and one part of good exterior or bartop varnish. Stir well, but avoid bubbling the varnish by shaking.

Apply the mixture freely to the wood with a small rag, rubbing each area until the surface starts to become sticky from evaporation of the turpentine. Continue with other surfaces till the piece is completely covered, loosely replacing the cover of the mixture container after each dipping to prevent excessive evaporation.

Set to dry in a room with good circulation, as dust-free as possible. Depending upon the weather, from one to three days will be required. When dry, with no turpentine odor detectable by your nose held cl to the surface, rub the piece smooth and free of small lun caused by dust particles. Use #00 steel wool, or 7/0 or garnet finishing paper.

Repeat the oil varnish appli tion and the rubbing for two three more coatings, or until desired finish is achieved. Use #000 or #0000 steel wool, o worn piece of 7/0 or 8 0 gar paper, for the final dressing.

After the final finish, wax desired with the beeswax soluti

Oil varnish is also good touching up varnished surfaces.

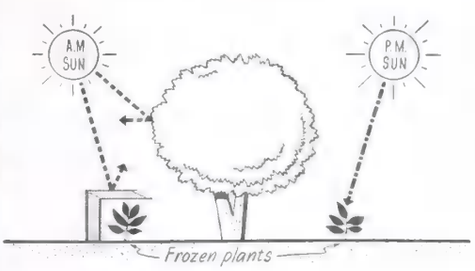
Sunlight can be filtered to desired degree through artificial devices. Laid in normal pattern (A), lath screens half the midday sun but shuts out more of the moderate sun at its low angles. At an angle (B), it gives better midday screening, also admits more of the low sun. Direction of the angle brings in morning or afternoon sun as desired: a pivot to reverse the angle can bring in both. Staggered lath (C) gives same screening all day. Plastic screen (D) reduces total sunlight by diffusion.



Ground slope regulates heat received by plants. Use the difference in ground temperatures established by slopes for better gardening. North slopes receive the sun's rays at an angle, are much cooler than south slopes.

Insulation can lessen freeze damage. Straw mulch or wrapping trunk with a material of poor heat-conductivity insulates while permitting sun to warm ground around plant. Constant 32-degree temperature of snow blanket is too warm to freeze leaves.

Shade frozen plants from the early sun. A slow and gradual thawing allows the plant to retain its normal water content and possibly suffer little damage. So protect tender plants from early sun during frost seasons. Later in the day sunlight will be beneficial.

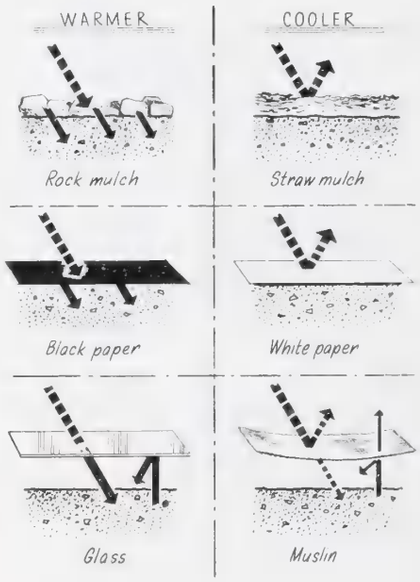
Type and condition of soil cause ground temperature variations. You can swing the temperatures to the warmer or cooler side, according to the heat requirements of your plants.

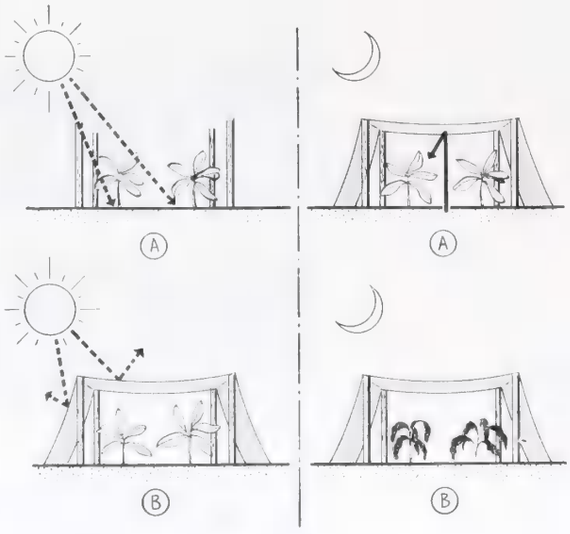
Loose soil is cooler than firm soil because its air spaces are poor heat conductors. Grass provides the same insulation plus shade.

Dampness within the soil aids heat conduction, provided the surface is dry. So a wet surface would be cooler because of its heat loss by evaporation.

Don't sprinkle your plants if frost threatens. Better that they suffer from the drouth. The evaporation from the leaves and the wet soil can drop the temperature enough to freeze the plant when dry plants near by escape without harm. This is why a clear night following a rain is dangerous in frost seasons.



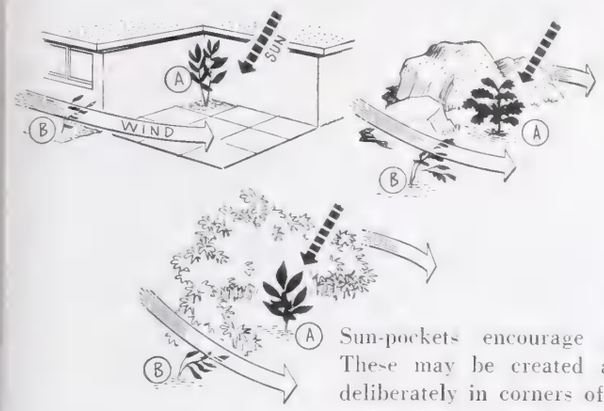
You can warm or cool your soil. Rocks have great heat-absorbing capacity, re-radiate to the earth below. Air spaces of the straw prevent the heat from reaching the soil below.



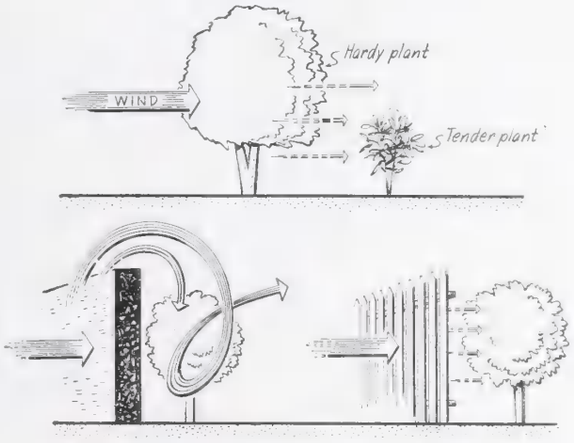
Black paper conducts heat to the soil; white reflects it. (Remove black cover at night to allow heat to be re-radiated to plants.)

Glass is highly effective: Short rays turn into long rays and are unable to escape again when re-radiated from the ground.

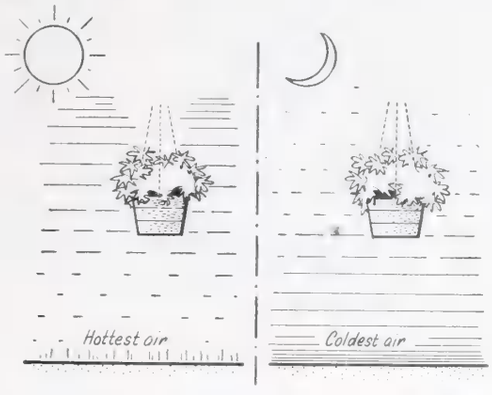
Muslin or burlap filters the sunlight, also permits partial escape of long rays.



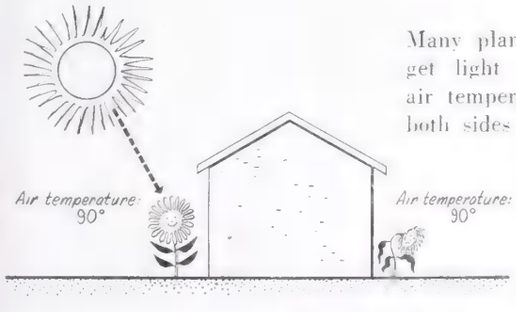
You may wonder about adding heat by means of a heater of some kind. Actually this is not too practical for a home gardener. Even farmers find the expense too great except in areas where frost occurs only a few times a year and then on isolated nights. If the cold lasts more than one night, the warmed air tends to rise, making heating even more expensive.



Heat must be obtained first to be conserved. If the source of heat is shut out during the day, nothing will be stored for radiation at night. Plants (A) receive the benefit of radiated heat in daylight. Night-and-day cover keeps sunlight away from plants (B). Covers of materials permeable to short rays need not be removed during the day.

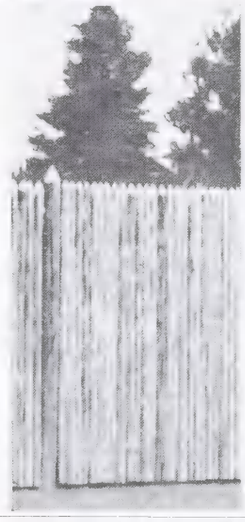


This is the second in a series on Micro-climate and how to better your private climate. The first article appeared in our July, 1954 issue, pages 180-183



Sun-pockets encourage plant growth. These may be created accidentally or deliberately in corners of your patio, in rocky shelters or by plantings. Plants (A) have the favored locations away from drying winds which can stunt growth and misshape the branches of plants (B).

Porous windbreaks are effective protection. A solid slab perpendicular to the wind sets up eddies and disturbances which may be almost as bad as the wind itself. When not completely blocked as it passes through a windbreak, speed is reduced to a harmless point. Hardy plants are ideal for this slow down.



Air-layer temperatures change by the foot and by the hour. In the daytime, the lowest air layer is super-heated by ground radiation. At night the coldest air sinks to the lowest level. Tender plants may do better in baskets or on high shelves.

Many plants stand heat if they get light with it. Though the air temperature is the same on both sides of the house, a plant may thrive on the sunny side and wilt on the shady side because of the lack of needed sunlight.

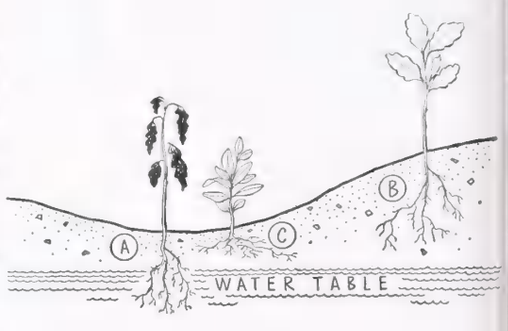
Do not let a "ceiling" touch your plants: Heat will be lost by conduction directly through the material. Draped loosely over the plant, burlap protects it if held away from the leaves by a frame.



Water cools by evaporation. It does this by borrowing heat from the surface on which it stands. Sprinkling your plants during hot weather drops their temperatures and cools the air. This is most effective when the air is driest (can hold more water).

Shallow root system

Shallow-rooted shade plants are not able to reach very far into the ground for their water. Here a group is given ample protection from sun and wind by a shadowy nook of rocks, which in turn are prevented from becoming radiators by the shade of taller bushes or trees. Other plantings help break the winds which dry out the atmosphere. Evaporation from the pool moistens the air.

Poor drainage can drown plants. Ground surface may be dry but water table too high for deep-rooted plant (A). Same plant (C) may do well up a slope. Shallow-rooted plant (B) may not be affected by water.

What can be grown?

The 10 suggestions given so far on what to do to make your city garden successful assume that 5 conditions already exist, for without these 5 in your favor you might as well forget the whole idea.

1. The soil has not become poisoned through ages of contamination by falling soot (or that such bad soil has been replaced now by new soil full of beneficial bacterial action).

2. The soil is reasonably loose so that roots can penetrate it. Obviously if the area has been used for years as a path or roadway you have to restore its physical condition before anything can grow.

3. The garden receives some direct sunlight every day. This so-called direct sunlight actually can be "bounced" into the garden by a smooth, white wall, if necessary. Or maybe thinning out a tree would greatly increase the amount of light reaching your plants. Without 4 hours of sunshine, better 6, you can't expect most plants to grow, although you can still have a successful garden if you are willing to buy full-size plants and plant them with the realization that they must inevitably decline in vigor with each passing week and month until they have to be replaced. Many highly enjoyed city gardens have been so conducted.

4. There are no near-by industrial fumes pouring out in sufficient concentration to damage or kill plants. The plants listed below are rather resistant to ordinary air pollution, but no plant can survive a real blitz, especially if it is repeated frequently. If you are in a bad smog belt, but have no close neighbor belching dangerous fumes, you probably will get along satisfactorily.

5. There are no hot gases being exhausted near by in such a way that they actually flow directly against and burn the plants. Automobile exhaust gases are extremely hot, kill a plant in a matter of minutes. Kitchen exhaust fans produce a lower temperature, but they can be very drying to plants and therefore lethal, especially under continuous running, as from a next-door restaurant. And sometimes local breeze conditions are such that hot gases from an improperly designed chimney are whipped downward after they leave the chimney, resulting in severe burning of near-by plants. Damage is most severe in cold weather. Frozen plants may be killed by one such occurrence.

Barring these hazards, choose from the following plants for areas subject to cold winters. Expect to have to pamper any plant because you just can't expect superb plant health under city conditions. You will get good growth, though, often surprisingly good flowering.

Trees

1ST CHOICE: ash, catalpa, Aralia spinosa, ginkgo, honeylocust, horse chestnut, sycamore maple, Russian olive, poplar (can be grown in tubs), weeping willow.

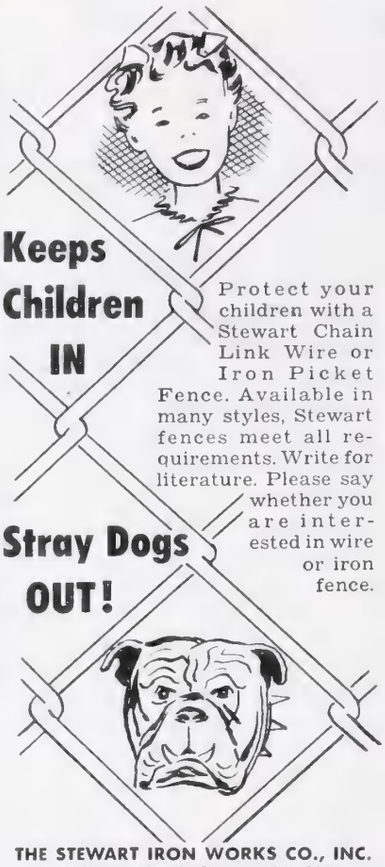
BOOKS FOR GARDENERS

Photographing Your Flowers by Mary and Jack Roche. Greenberg. New York, 1954. $3.75.

Picture taking quickly becomes an essential part of gardening. Good pictures for winter viewing and for sharing your garden with distant friends just about have to be made by the gardener himself. Only he knows when all is at perfection and is available to catch it right then on film.



Where others might make beautiful pictures of garden moods, the gardener-photographer loves plants enough to give of himself so that he captures their personality. This requires infinite patience, far more than most photographers will expend, because there are so many sensational garden pictures, i. e., moods, they see while waiting. Then, too, getting to really know a plant, obviously essential if the true portrait is to come through in the photograph, is a long process requiring patience.

Technique in picture making is now fully detailed in many books. Getting to know plants well—to really look at them, as HOUSE BEAUTIFUL has been saying in its current series, "How to Use Plants with Style," is more involved, depending on developing awareness within yourself.

The most useful book on garden photography—still to be created—will combine photographic technique with plant appreciation, demonstrated with pictures. A real start has been made, however, by the Roches. They do use some pictures. Many are helpful (Why they wasted the precious few color pages baffles me: They have perfectly gorgeous color photographs in their files, so apparently we must blame penny-pinching for the use of old printing plates instead of more useful color pages.)

The extensive section on indoor photography (plants, flowers and flower arrangements) contains much help. Incidentally, it is heavily illustrated. I object strongly, however, to the suggestion (p. 72) that small plants be photographed against an artificial sky. I object precisely for the reason the Roches advance for their suggestion; namely, that the plants can't be seen against the sky in the garden. If you really know your plant, really appreciate it for what it is and for what it is not, you want it photographed as it is.

I hope that some of our other famous garden photographers—Maynard Parker, Sam Gottscho, Mason Weymouth, Ron Partridge, Phil Fein or one of the rising "crop," John Robinson, et al, in a few years will follow the Roches and share their discoveries with home gardeners who want a record on film of the year's achievements.—J. E. H.

Guest coat closet in the Harris apartment is so spacious that it provides an inner closet for storing card tables, luggage and golf clubs. Door to this closet, covered in same fabric as walls, is fitted with convenient shelves for handbags and gloves.

Elevator foyer has a restrained, Oriental freshness. Notice the dropped ceiling with its soft concealed lighting which further stresses the mood suggested by the unusual Chinese calligraphy panels used for wall decoration. Bench is covered in striped silk.

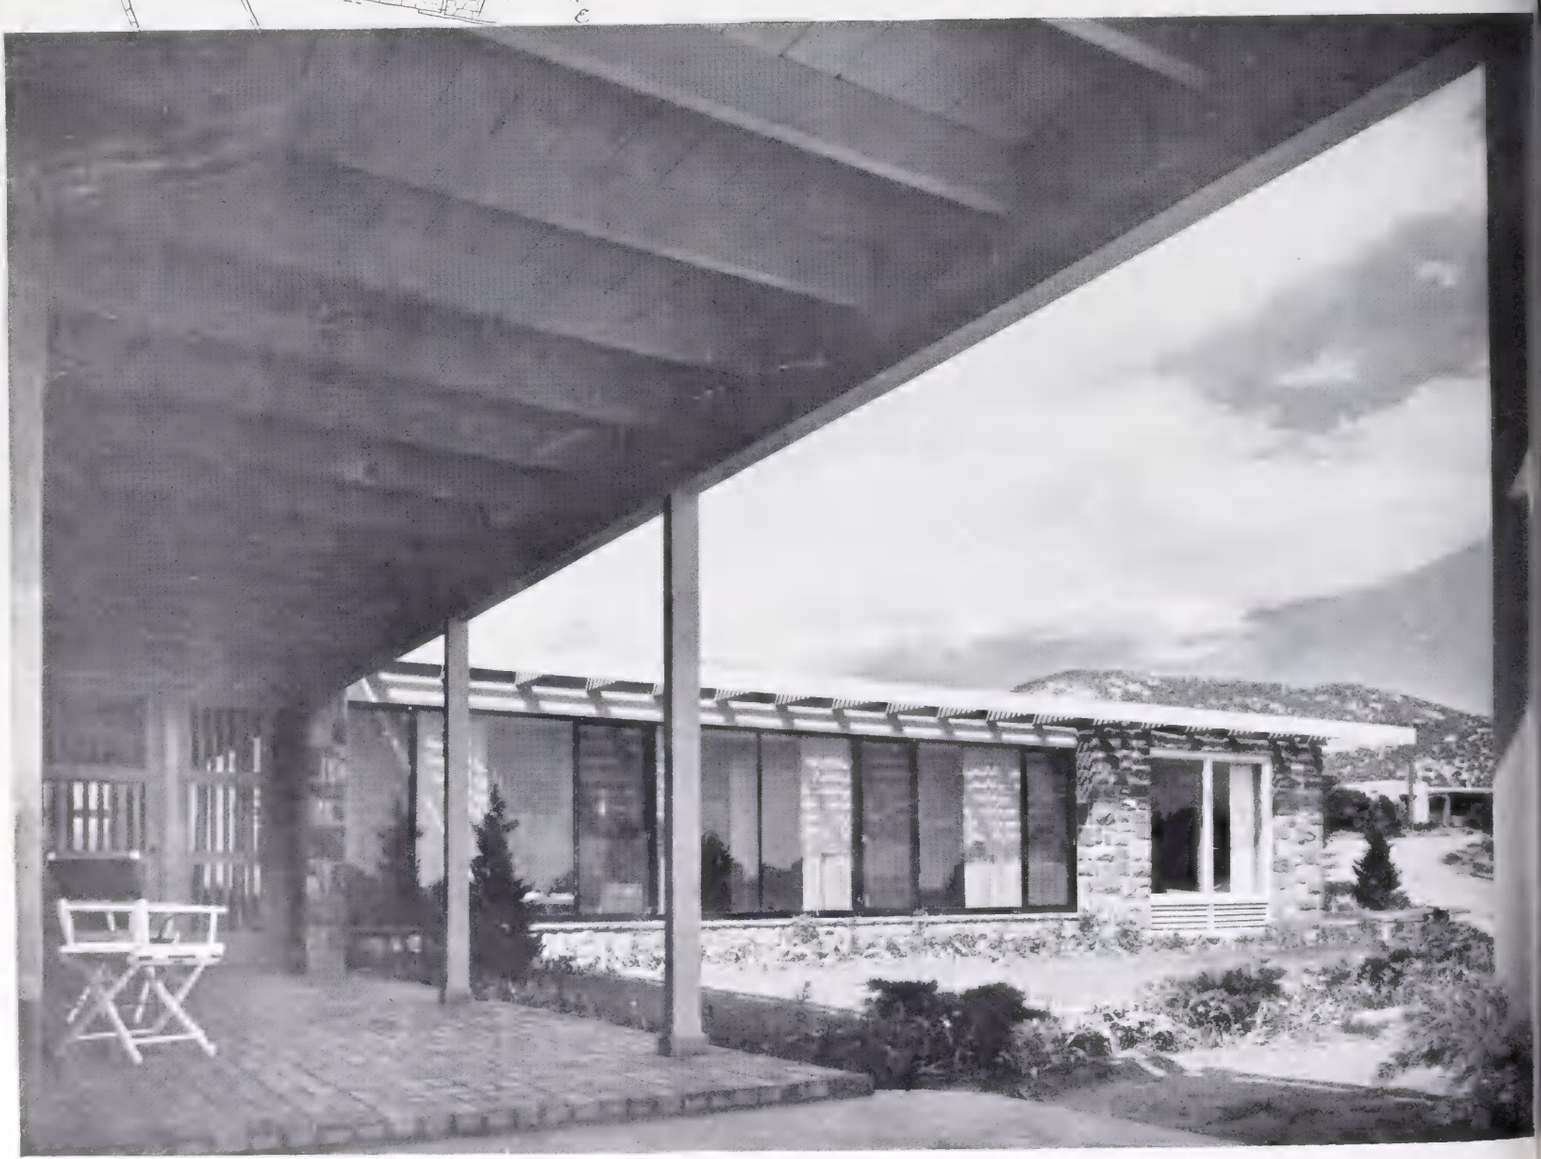
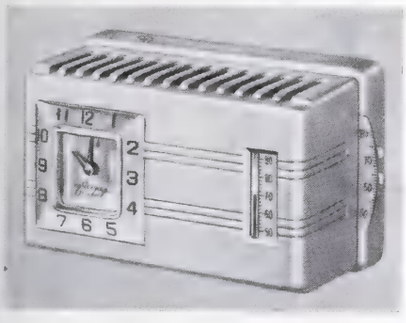
WHEREVER YOU LIVE, HONEYWELL ZONE CONTROL CAN HELP YOU



Enjoy wonderful new comfort

You need more than one thermostat to solve today's heating problems



The ranch home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Dendahl in Santa Fe, New Mexico, is well designed to key the family life of the Dendahls to the exciting character of its setting. And it's well designed, too, with its Honeywell Zone Control installation, to provide comfortable living in this mild-winter area of the U.S. In the Dendahl home three separate thermostat systems were required to solve occupancy and exposure problems—and provide comfortable, even warmth. One thermostat controls comfort in the west zone—the living-dining-service area. A second controls the south bedroom-and-gallery zone. A third controls the north zone—which includes a bedroom and den. If you'd like to enjoy the same wonderful new comfort the Dendahls enjoy, no matter where your home is located, install Honeywell Zone Control. Your architect, heating or plumbing contractor will be able to tell you about it.

The Dendahl home was designed by architect Kenneth S. Clark.

Zone 1. The separate thermostat system in this area controls comfort in the dining, living and service areas. It compensates as handily for chill west winds during the cool season as it does for the solar effect of the late afternoon sun on a bright day. And Honeywell Zone Control easily compensates for extra heat from the fireplace and the extra warmth, too, that comes from the kitchen at meal times.

HONEYWELL
THERMOSTAT

Owners say the Honeywell clock thermostat is wonderful because it turns down the heat—automatically—when you go to bed, and gives you a nice cool room to sleep in: turns up the heat—automatically—while you're still asleep, and your home is warm when you get up. Saves you fuel, besides.

Send for our FREE booklet, "Plan to enjoy more comfort in more of your home." It tells why Zone Control is needed in homes with glass walls, fireplaces, one-story construction and other modern home characteristics.

MINNEAPOLIS
Zone Control

Zone 2. Temperature in the master bedroom is controlled by the separate thermostat system comprising heating Zone 2. Here comfort is insured by Honeywell Zone Control which compensates for extra heat from southern and eastern sunshine. And with Zone Control, temperatures can be turned back during parts of the day when the area is not in use, and at night for healthful, cool sleeping.

Zone control plays an extremely important role in providing comfortable temperatures in the gallery. The big windows you see above face almost due south, admit a great deal of solar heat on sunshiny winter afternoons. The south zone thermostat (zone 2) compensates for this extra heat, keeping the gallery at just the right temperature all the time.

Only with Zone Control can you

1. remove wintertime chill from rooms with large glass areas—without overheating the rest of your house.
2. maintain special areas of your home (bedrooms are a good example) at low, fuel-saving temperatures when they're not in use — without underheating living areas.

OAK NEVER FADES NOR WEARS AWAY. Nature gave Oak rich, colorful grain that goes all the way through the wood. In an Oak floor there's no skin-deep beauty to wear away…sunlight, age and temperature changes can never fade its charm. Oak is strong, resists denting by heavy furniture. Its resilience gives restful comfort underfoot. Modern Oak floors are beautiful, economical and durable—the first choice of 8 out of 10 homeowners. Make Oak your choice, too, for lifetime livability. Tell your architect, builder or dealer that you want Oak floors in your new or remodeled home.

Beautiful, practical and economical, leather fits our modern way of life perfectly. The elegance and distinction it gives a room is warm and friendly.

Like all furniture upholstered in genuine leather, these Heritage-Henredon pieces need almost no care. Their scuff-resistant finish repels soiling; the glowing colors remain rich and beautiful. Leather is the only upholstery material known that actually improves with use and age.

Heritage-Henredon upholsters many of their best-loved pieces in leather. The lifetime of wear which you may expect from furniture of such fine quality, only enriches the burnished sheen of this handsome, durable material.

As companion pieces for fabric-upholstered furniture—like the gracefully curved nubby-damask sofa pictured above—there is a special charm in the glowing beauty of leather topped tables.

The Heritage-Henredon name is a hallmark denoting quality and distinction. You will find much pleasure in the possession of even a single piece of this fine furniture—for example, one of these luxurious leather chairs—knowing that it will be a source of pride and satisfaction for the rest of your life.

YOUR BARTLETT DENDRICIAN...

A local man with a national reputation

When you employ Bartlett to take care of your trees, you not only get the benefit of the reputation and knowledge of a large national organization—you get the benefit of the services of local men familiar with local conditions.

In our research Laboratories at Stamford, a group of scientists are working constantly to find better ways to protect and preserve the shade trees of America.

But the man who actually does your tree work, the man who carries out the recommendations of our Laboratories is the Dendrician. He is a trained technician, similar in his way to the professional nurse. He knows the peculiarities of his patients and is skilled in the handling of the latest remedies and specialized equipment to restore them to health.

To qualify, the Bartlett Dendrician has to meet high physical and education requirements. He is then given comprehensive training at the Bartlett School of Tree Surgery. So, when he is assigned to a local office, he has not only had a skillful training in the fine art of tree care, he has been trained so that he can be depended upon to carry out the recommendations of your Bartlett representative and put into practice the knowledge of the Bartlett Tree Research Laboratories which stand behind them.

This teamwork—the combination of local Dendricians and the men in the Bartlett Tree Research Laboratories—has proved to those critical of results that the Bartlett Way (The Scientific Way) gives the best results in the long run. Call your nearest Bartlett office for a study of your tree situation.

Hail to the Emperor!

By RICHARD WILLIAMS

In the family of Beethoven's compositions, there are to be found several bearing titles of nobility. You come across a count, Count Rasoumovsky, in the quartets dedicated to him, and an archduke in the Archduke Trio. Most famous of these titled works, however, is the Emperor Concerto for piano and orchestra.

"Emperor" is a title which Beethoven never gave to his composition, never knew about, and I dare say would not have countenanced. The probabilities are that he would have strongly resented so fulsome a title. Then who made it up? How did it affix itself to the concerto? Nobody knows. But there it is, a mark of respect for the concerto's greatness, an attempt to express its quality and importance in a word. It's the king of all concertos. We must be careful, however: the "Emperor" is not inferior to Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony, though Jupiter is the head of the gods and bigger than any emperor. By the way, Mozart also was innocent of this title.

Whether we like the title or not, it may have helped—no, it most certainly did help—to make the concerto popular. People like a nickname. In music especially, a short description, no matter how loose, is welcome. When we speak of the Sonata No. 8 in C Minor, opus 13, or the Sonata in C-Sharp Minor, opus 27, No. 2, we are spe ing of works which you may recognize until we say "Pathetiq for the first and "Moonlight" the second. Then, of course, t become friends. The Piano Con to No. 5 in E-Flat Major, opus is and will remain the "Emper

An Emperor, Napoleon, in fered with its composition. Alm not quite. You have heard peo say, "If only I had the time opportunity, I might be able write a book or paint a picture sing a song." TOTALLY NEW! "SILVER SCULPTURE" BY REED & BARTON

Here is a dramatic new sterling pattern that actually is sculptured silver. Its lights and shadows, the glory of its pure metal, look excitingly different every time you set the table.

"Silver Sculpture" is Reed & Barton's answer to "free taste" in American table settings. Its soft, sculptural beauty is fresh, new-looking. Yet its flowing lines allow you plenty of originality if you like to use traditional décor.

To create this unique pattern, silver artists shaped a "figure" as a sculptor would in stone or bronze. They created rhythm from the gleam of the solid silver itself! The result is a pattern of many moods. Wonderful to live with, because it rarely looks the same way twice. And it is the kind of form your fingers love to feel.

This brilliant new pattern by famous Reed & Barton is easy to own. A six-piece place setting is $32.50. Federal tax included. For literature, see your silverware dealer or write Reed & Barton, Dept. F44, Taunton, Mass.

One of the priceless aspects of Cadillac ownership, we are told, is the way in which it adds to the joy and satisfaction of family living. The new Cadillac is so wonderful to ride in and drive, that it automatically becomes a major center of family activity and recreation. It is so beautiful to behold and so inspiring to own, that it takes its place as a chief source of family pride and pleasure. And it is so soundly designed and so soundly built, that it adds to the safety and contentment of every family journey. Little wonder, then, that the ladies of Cadillac families regard their motor cars with such deep affection—just as we know you will, once a new Cadillac comes into your family. Why not visit your dealer soon—and let him show you how sensibly it can be arranged!

"How to use MIRROR MAGIC to gain depth, height and more light"

by Mildred Irby . . . Interior Decorator . . . New York City

Miss Irby says, "This living room seemed small and narrow, hence the large, clear mirror over the sofa opposite, and reflecting, the chimney-piece. This appears to double the width of the room, giving it a more pleasant and spacious quality. Naturally, the mirror imparts depth to shadows and sparkle to lights. Another important role of the mirrors in this room is the reflection from the windows opposite, giving more daylight and also adding height to the low-ceilinged space. The mirror is on the entrance wall—which always seems to add a quality of structural depth to a modern apartment."

When you use mirrors for such decorative effects, be sure to select mirrors made of L·O·F's revolutionary new Parallel-O-Plate Glass, the glass that's Twin-Ground to give you an exactness of image and sparkling clarity never before dreamed possible!

Was Ruth Colt Out of Her Head To Spend Two Dollars For a Dust Cloth?

When Ruth Colt of La Cresta Drive, San Diego, California, sent us her first order for a Conniver, she said,

"I'm probably out of my head to spend as much for a dust cloth as I would for a good steak! But if your cloth does half of what you say it will do, it'll be well worth it to me!"

Next thing we heard from Mrs. Colt was some weeks later, when she ordered three more Connivers and said,

"It's all true—and it's wonderful! If I couldn't get another, I wouldn't take ten dollars for Conniver!"

RUTH COLT'S NO FOOL

Mrs. Colt realized that when a company talks about a product the way we talk about Conniver—something very special is going on! What with Federal Trade Commissions and publishers who protect their readers against misleading advertising, advertisers simply can't get away with anything that's very far out of line.

We've been getting away with the sale of Conniver for a year. Re-orders from every state in the Union plus a file-full of letters telling us that Conniver is even better than we say it is—these things point out that we're in line; that housewives will buy the finest dust cloth ever made, even though it must sell high.

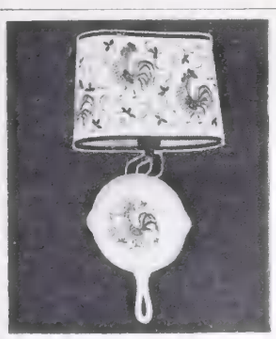
HERE'S WHY MRS. COLT SPENT $2

Conniver ends dirt-cling. A touch on any surface—wood, glass, metal, porcelain, plastic or leather—and it instantly applies a tough but invisible film that will not hold on to dust or dirt. The result is that anything wiped with Conniver is afterward cleaned with just a flick of the cloth. That's because Silicone is the finest "release material" known to science. (A release material keeps one thing from sticking to another.) Reader's Digest has raved about it. Big industry uses tons of it. And Conniver contains more Silicone than any other maker has yet been able to get into a cloth!

Use Conniver on woodwork, windows, furniture, mirrors, porcelain and chrome appliances—everywhere in your home. It won't hide or discolor any finish, but will enhance lustre. Get one for the car, because then you can wash it dry, with just a wipe. Clean your Conniver simply by shaking it out. Or, if you prefer, dunk it in a mild detergent solution. It will come up smiling, because the Silicone is there for keeps.

WE GUARANTEE IT—TO THE HILT!

We don't know how to write a stronger Guarantee than the one we've put on Conniver. We say that if Conniver doesn't do everything we promised, we'll instantly refund every cent you paid—and you may keep the cloth! There are no strings on this. You're the judge.



Every word we've said is true. Mrs. Colt knows that. You will too—so mail your order today!

We sell Conniver in two sizes. The standard 12 x 18-inch Conniver is $2.00 (or three for $5.00). And the deluxe-size 18 x 24-inch Conniver is $3.00 (or three for $8.00). We pay postage, but can't accept COD orders.

You buy Conniver by mail—only from us in all the country. And we Guarantee that you'll be glad you did!
